Women and Their Interests

Why I Married a Second Time

By Dorothy Dix "Why did I marry the second time?" repeated the Man with the Cynical Smile. "Because I am a gambler at life. Because I am an optimist in philosophy and a plunger in business and I took a second chance at happiness. "Heaven knows my first matrimonial venture was disastrous enough. I married one of those women who seem made for the undoing of men, a beautiful, fair, stary-eyed young creature, who look as soft and fresh, and tender as a June rose, but who was as hard and petrified within as a piece of New England granite.

"I was young, romantic, with my head filled with visions of what life would be with a wife at my side who answered to my every ideal of mind and soul. I waked up from my dream to find out I was tied to a woman who regarded matrimony merely as a meal ticket, and a husband as a sort of human case, a resistor to be worked for all she could get out of him.

"That wasn't enough to satisfy her, or make the game interesting in those days, for I was just getting the start in business and money was none too plentiful. In consequence our married life was as good an understudy of an earthly purgatory as you could wish to see. I, nervous, overworked, overwrought, fighting desperately and futilely against my wife's mad extravagance and the flood of bills that were always threatening to overwhelm me, and drag me down into ruin. She, furious because she could not have the jewels and clothes, and motors, and trips that she saw other women have, always reproaching me and flinging in my face the bitter accusation that I did not succeed as well as some other men did.

"At last it ended, as such a marriage was bound to end, in divorce. She found an old millionaire that she befriended with her soft baby face as she had befriended me, and I thanked God for my deliverance when she went to Reno to get a divorce from me upon the trumped up charge of cruelty and inhuman treatment, though the only cruel and inhuman treatment I had ever inflicted upon her was my failure to supply her with all the money she desired.

"There are many faults that a man can forgive a woman, but the one thing that strips the last vestige of glamor from about her is to find her second, to realize that the only thing she cares for it that she can get out of him. I had had a bitter lesson in feminine cupidity, and so for a long time after my wife left me, I saw in woman only the vampire, a loathsome creature who sucks the very life blood out of a man, and then, when she has left him worthless, passes on to another victim.

"But after a while I got a saner point of view. I said to myself that because one apple on a tree was rotten it did not prove that all apples were bad, and because I had the misfortune to marry one woman with the soul of a money grubber, did not prove all women were mere bundles of selfishness and avarice.

"Moreover, I am, as I said, a gambler by nature, and so I determined not to drop out of the matrimonial game because I had lost out at my first throw, but to put down my last coin on the table and try to call for a new shuffle and deal of the cards.

"Risky, of course, but of one thing I was sure, and that was that nothing could be as bad as what I had been through, and I had the loser's desperate faith that luck was bound to change, and that fate must relent and be kind to me at last. Also I had that strange feeling of baffled happiness, of being denied something that was my right, of being cheated out of something that was my due, that those who have made miserable marriages always have.

"Old bachelors look on even the most congenial marriages and the happiest homes without a pang of envy or desire, but we whose marriages have been failures are eaten up with the sense of what we have missed when we behold a man and woman being to each other what God intended they should be.

"Who He Tried Again shines so brightly as to the eyes of those whose own fires upon the hearth have gone out. Home never seems so dear to those who have tried to make a home and found it in ruins about them. No arms are so empty as those that have been stretched out to the little children that never came to the little children ever aches so for companionship as that which has held a once dear head upon it that has gone. It is the urge of what you have loved and lost, of what you have striven for and failed to get, that sends the unhappily married back once more to risk the storms of matrimony again.

"In the face of that longing, of that desperate need, of that determination to wrest happiness from life at last, of what avail are even the warnings of one's own experience? One knows the danger, but one dares it. It is the great adventure, and strangely enough, just because one has failed the first time, he is sure he cannot fail the second, and so with his fingers crossed, and his rabbit's foot in his pocket, he marches the second time up to the altar.

"And generally his gambler's superstition is justified and his luck does change, and his second marriage is a success."

The man with the cynical smile paused and lit a cigaret. "Doctor Johnson said it," he added. "You remember, he said that every second marriage was the triumph of hope over experience. As a diagnosis of the psychology of the second marriage that cannot be beaten—or amplified."

FOR EARLY AUTUMN

A Smart Coat that can be Made With or Without the Pockets.

By MAY MANTON

8748 Girl's Coat, 6 to 12 years.

Coats are sure to be needed with the first cool days. Here is an exceedingly smart one that is rendered very dressy by means of the sash, yet which is eminently simple and easy to make. The fronts are plain, body and skirt portion being joined beneath the sash, but the back of the body portion is made over a lining and the outside is finished separately to extend over the sash, so giving a distinctive and novel effect. The patch pockets are fashionable, but they are not necessary and may be used or not as occasion requires. The neck may be finished with a high collar or with a sailor collar and the high collar can be either buttoned up closely or rolled open slightly at the neck. For coats of the sort will be used a great variety of materials; broadcloth is always smart; the heavier poplins and ribbed silks are fashionable; later, velvet will be extensively used and for every-day wear, serge and cheviot make excellent materials, with the sash of any pretty silk or ribbon.

For the 8 year size will be needed 3 1/2 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 2 1/2 yds. 36, 2 1/2 yds. 44, 2 yds. 54, with 2 yds. 27 in. wide for the sash, collar and cuffs. The May Manton pattern No. 8748 is cut in sizes from 6 to 12 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

THE YELLOW FAMINE

The present situation in the dye industry, due to the cutting off of shipments of certain color ingredients from Europe, is responsible for some of the colors which are to be fashionable this Fall. Patriotic women who are interested in promoting American business interests have been advised to refrain from ordering the shades of brown and green which require yellow as a base. Yellow dye ingredients are becoming scarce each week, and a number of manufacturers are embarrassed by this situation.

The women who will confine their Fall wardrobes to such colors as blue, purple, black and gray will render their countrymen and effective service.

Her Grandmother Robbed of $75,000 in Jewelry

MRS. PRESTON GIBSON

One of the largest jewelry robberies in many years was that of Mrs. James McMillan, widow of the late United States senator from Michigan, at her summer home, Eagle Head, at Manchester-by-the-Sea, in Massachusetts, when valuables worth $75,000 were taken from the house. And it has become one of the most mysterious cases on which detectives have had to work. One agency was called off after considerable investigation had been made. Mrs. Preston Gibson, granddaughter of Mrs. McMillan, was with her at the time. Mrs. McMillan kept her jewelry in a safe near her room. Mrs. McMillan saved some $6,000 worth of her jewels because she wore a $4,000 pair of earrings and a $2,000 necklace to bed. Detectives said they could learn nothing about the case, but a statement was made by a company which insured the valuables that $42,000 had been paid to Mrs. McMillan.

IMMIGRANT BIRDS

Few persons realize that birds, like human beings, are ever on the lookout for new and desirable homes, and may frequently be induced to immigrate if sufficient attractions are offered.

The United States Reclamation Service has lately begun an attempt to induce desirable birds to live upon the lakes of its irrigation projects. It is meeting with gratifying success in many instances. The feathered settlers seem to like their new homes, as well as do their human neighbors. A pair of Kentucky cardinals taken to Boise, Idaho, took up their home in evident content and reared their young last year successfully. This year several pairs of them appeared in the vicinity, each of which has raised a family during the past summer. It would be interesting to know if the additional birds who came this summer were the young birds who had been hatched the year before or others who had been influenced to join a colony by learning of the liberal quantity of sunflower seed provided as food.

5 Women Avoid Operations

For years we have been stating in the newspapers of the country that a great many women have escaped serious operations by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it is true.

We are permitted to publish in this announcement extracts from the letters of five women. All have been recently received unsolicited. Could any evidence be more convincing?

- 1. HODGDON, Me.—"I had pains in both sides and such a soreness I could scarcely straighten up at times. My back ached and I was so nervous I could not sleep, and I thought I never would be any better until I submitted to an operation, but I commenced taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and soon felt like a new woman."—Mrs. HAYWARD SOWERS, Hodgdon, Me.
2. SHELBYSVILLE, Ky.—"I suffered from a severe female trouble. My right side hurt me badly—it was finally decided that I must be operated upon. When my husband learned this he got a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and after taking it a few days I got better and continued to improve until I am now well."—Mrs. MOLLIE SMITH, R.F.D., Shelbyville, Ky.
3. HANOVER, Pa.—"The doctor advised a severe operation, but my husband got me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I experienced great relief in a short time. Now I feel like a new person and can do a hard day's work and not mind it."—Mrs. ADA WILZ, 303 Walnut St., Hanover, Pa.
4. DECATUR, Ill.—"I was sick in bed and three of the best physicians said I would have to be taken to the hospital for an operation as I had something growing in my left side. I refused to submit to the operation and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and it worked a miracle in my case, and I tell other women what it has done for me."—Mrs. LAURA A. GRISWOLD, 2437 East William Street, Decatur, Ill.
5. CLEVELAND, Ohio.—"I was very irregular and for several years my side pained me so that I expected to have to undergo an operation. Doctors said they knew of nothing that would help me. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I became regular and free from pain. I am thankful for such a good medicine and will always give it the highest praise."—Mrs. C. H. GRIFFITH, 1568 Constant St., Cleveland, O.

FEEDING YOUR CHILDREN

Wherever three or four young matrons are gathered together, there sooner or later, the conversation will drift to the proper feeding of little children, especially babies. Each mother will have her pet authority and the names of specialties and titles of books on diet will fly around the circle. Those of the group, however, who have two or more children of their own are apt to be more conservative in their opinions and formulas, than the new beginners. They have learned that each child is a study by itself and that what suited one is by no means sure to suit the next.

Said a mother of five recently, "I have been obliged to revise all my theories with each of my children. I started in as an enthusiastic follower of a well-known specialist and my first child threw wonderfully on exactly the diet laid down in his book. My second child could not tolerate it at all, and I think we should have lost her had not my mother insisted upon giving her beef juice, almost drop by drop, to begin with. Long before, according to medical authority, she should have had meat in any form. I have come to believe that only two things are absolutely essential, and invariable in the treatment of the feeding problem—common sense and exquisite cleanliness. I carry my desire for the latter to such a point that I have separate cooking utensils for the children's food. These are all of enameled ware, the smooth sanitary surface of which affords no lurking place for germs. In summer the final rinsing water for these utensils contains a dash of soda. An enameled ware double boiler takes care of all the milk heating. Children's milk should never be really boiled except in cases of illness when it is to be used to cook dysentery. Three sizes of enameled ware saucapans answer to prepare the other food.

"All my children (but I know that may not mean all children) digest cooked fruit much more easily than the raw. Even fresh peaches should be stewed. Cooked slowly in an enameled ware saucapan they will keep their color and be almost as tempting as in their natural state. The question of potatoes for young children just coming into a varied diet, is a grave one. Almost all children like potatoes, and when baked they are easily digested, but some children do not seem to assimilate the large percentage of starch in this vegetable. When this is the case substitute rice for potatoes. To cook the rice have the water boiling and drop in the rice very slowly, stirring all the while.

Cook about twenty minutes. Then pour into an enameled ware strainer and finish the cooking by steam. In that way each grain of rice will be separate and yet perfectly cooked. One of the best foods for children in hot weather is junket. Warm the milk in the enameled ware double boiler, add a sugar and liquid rennet, pour into a glass dish and put on the ice to set. This is both very nourishing and easily digested."

Lime Starvation Causes Tuberculosis

In the Medical Record (New York) of December 18, 1909, Dr. John F. Russell says: "The condition which is recognized as preceding the active development of tuberculosis in the adult may be considered as due to lime starvation. Among inorganic substances lime salts appear to be of special physiological importance, but if the salts are not in organic combination, it is impossible to suppose that the cells can appropriate them for food." Years of widespread use confirm our belief that the success of Eckman's Alternative in tuberculosis is due largely to its content of lime, in such combination with other valuable ingredients as to be easily appropriated by the cells. Dozens of cases have had much to do with the results in many cases which appear to have yielded to it. As it contains no opiates or habit-forming drugs, it is safe to try. Your druggist has it or will get it. Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia. Advertisement.
