"Their Married Life"

Copyright by International News Service

Helen lowered the shades in the living room and snapped off all but one light. The day had been infernally warm and even now the air was close, although a slight breeze had sprung up. She glanced around the cozy room, and then, with a satisfied smile, went back to her room.

Winifred had not yet gone to bed. Warren had gone to the lodge and Helen had allowed the child to eat her bread and milk at the table. She hated to eat alone and Warren had dined down town that evening for the first time since she could remember. She had wondered a little about it at first and then with a shamed little laugh she had decided not to make mountains out of molehills. She would never allow herself to worry about it.

"What not in bed yet?" laughed Helen, as she saw Winifred lying in the center of her bed, her slim feet waving in the air and her hair a tumble of tawney glory.

"Let's talk," said Winifred decisively.

"But, darling," remonstrated Helen, sitting down by the bed, "it's past your bedtime."

"Just to-night," Winifred pleaded, "it's so hot, mother."

"Well, wait until mother gets into something cooler," and Helen, in a few minutes, had slipped into a negligee and was waiting for her daughter to begin about school.

School had been the topic of conversation for the past week. Winifred was wild to go, and Helen had made arrangements for her to begin kindergarten at a private school a couple of blocks distant. Mary was to take her every morning.

There had been a scene at first, as Warren wanted her to begin at public school immediately. Warren's sister, Carrie, had strongly advocated this, too, and at a family dinner party one evening had made things very uncomfortable for Helen. She had won out finally, however, and Winifred was to attend private school until she was a little older.

A Kindergarten Party

Winifred settled herself comfortably against the pillow, crossed her slim ankles, smoothed the silk of her new pajamas, and looked up at her mother expectantly.

"You begin," she said.

"Well, you make all kinds of pretty mats, and baskets, and," she stopped for the bell of the apartment had rung suddenly. "Now I wonder who could be calling to-night?"

A moment later a gay laughing voice was heard, and Helen, with an impulsive little movement had rushed into the foyer and came back a minute later with Frances Knowles. Winifred adored Frances, who always made a great deal of her. She sat down now on the bed and was squeezed around the neck adoringly.

"I'm so glad you came," said Helen, "I thought I saw your husband at Times Square, and saw Frances as she took off her hat and ruffled her copper hair."

"I wonder what he was doing at Times Square," said Helen, "perhaps he dined uptown." The thought was a little disquieting, as Warren had said that he would get a bite near the office and then go to the lodge later. The lodge was nowhere near Times Square. Well, she must not let Frances know that she had any doubts—that would be too childish.

"Did you have a wonderful trip?" Frances was saying. "I have wanted to see you ever since you came back, but I haven't had a minute really."

"You look so well," said Helen, "what have you been doing to yourself? I declare the city seems to have done more for you than my entire trip did for me." Helen was pale and a little tired from the continued heat.

"I am well," declared the girl, and very happy.

"You're very more stories," questioned Helen.

"One to the Meteor," she said happily. "But to Helen it isn't that, it's a man; I'll tell you about him some time, but not to-night."

Winifred Steps In

Winifred was clamoring for attention. "I am going to school," she announced proudly.

"You don't tell me," said Frances, when are you going to start?

"I want her to say good-night to me," said Winifred as Helen picked her up.

"Of course I will," said Frances, following Helen into the next room. Winifred was put into bed, and a light down coverlet placed in readiness. Frances sat by the bed and held the cool little hand.

"Good night, White Rose," she said softly.

"Good night, White Rose," said Winifred sleepily. It had been a game with them to see which one could think of the prettiest name, but Winifred was a tardy passenger for Dreamland that night and she refused to stand open any longer.

"Come into my room," said Helen softly as she snapped off the light. "I have something for you."

"How lovely," exclaimed Frances, and then gasped over the old silver bracelet. She slipped it on her arm and turned it every way admiringly.

"I just love it," she said excitedly.

"How dear of you, Helen."

Helen showed her some trinkets—lines that had come from the mine near San Diego and they talked of the trip. When Frances rose to go, Helen remembered that she had told her nothing of her new happiness.

"But you have something to tell me," she remonstrated as she followed Frances to the door.

"Some other time," returned the girl. "I couldn't talk of it to-night."

And Helen returned to the living room with the same feeling of unrest that she had felt when Frances called on her to say good-by that afternoon many weeks ago.

FOR ACTIVE BOYS

Over-alls of a New and Interesting Sort.

By MAY MANTON

8747 Child's Overalls with Blouse, 2 to 6 years.

Here is one of the prettiest possible play costumes for the small boy. It consists of over-alls and a blouse and the blouse can be either smocked or simply gathered, but smocking is constantly gaining in favor, makes a really important feature of the latest styles and gives a very new and smart touch without in the least interfering with the essentially masculine characteristics. Here, the blouse is made of white lawn and the over-alls are of blue gingham, but for the latter, any sturdy washable material can be substituted, while for the blouse, handkerchief lawn, batiste or any similar fabric is suitable. Linen, cotton poplin and the like make especially good over-alls and boys are quite apt to like a plain dark blue or brown better than the lighter colors, although for the very little tots, the paler blues and pinks are pretty.

For the 4 year size will be required for the over-alls 1 1/4 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 1 1/4 yds. 36, 1 yd. 44; for the blouse will be needed, 2 yds. 27, 1 1/4 yds. 36, 1 1/4 yds. 44. For smocking use design No. 905.

The May Manton pattern No. 8747 is cut in sizes from 2 to 6 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

Messiah Boys Enjoy Peanuts and Pretzels

Peanuts and pretzels, lemonade, songs and speeches—these were some of the features of the splendid social program the boys of Messiah Lutheran Church enjoyed last evening. Dr. John H. Fager presided and opened the meeting with an entertaining little talk.

Mrs. Mabel Cronise Jones spoke to the boys on the qualities that go to make up a first-class boy and the importance of developing those qualities. The "Three C's—Courage, Courtesy and Cleanliness" was the subject of the Rev. H. W. A. Hanson, the pastor, talked upon the subject of the "City of Mine." City Forester Harry J. Mueller's address completed the speaking program and the session was closed with singing. Popular ballads that included "Tipperary," "That Olden Mine," etc., were among the favorites. Miss Backenstoss led the singing.

KING, EDUCATED CHIMPANZEE CANNOT APPEAR THIS WEEK

Shortly before noon to-day the management of the Majestic Theater received a telegram from New York stating that King, the educated chimpanzee had taken sick and that he would be unable to appear for his part of the performances for the first half of the week.

Just how serious King's illness was not stated. If he recovers the local management hopes to have him booked for Harrisburg at an early date. The valuable animal, however, is heavily insured, and owing to the extreme delicacy of monkeys in this climate, the insurance company will refuse to let them move him if he is suffering with even the slightest illness.

Simultaneous with the sending of the telegram to Harrisburg regarding King, the Keith Booking Offices also wired saying they were sending a splendid act to take his place.

PROTEST AGAINST SHOOTING NURSE

Grey Asks U. S. to Investigate Killing of Miss Cavelle by German

London, Oct. 19.—The Foreign Secretary, Sir Edward Grey, has requested the American government to investigate the circumstances which attended the putting to death of Miss Edith Cavelle, a British nurse, in Brussels.

Miss Cavelle, who had been at the head of a training school in Brussels, was shot by order of the German authorities on the charge of having harbored British and French soldiers and Belgians of military age and assisting them to escape from Belgium.

Amsterdam, Oct. 19.—Such details as it is possible to collect here concerning the death of Miss Edith Cavelle are as follows:

The principal charge against her was of aiding Belgians to escape to England. It is stated that she hid them in her house and provided them with money and addresses in England, and helped to smuggle them across the frontier. A German military court found her guilty and sentenced her to death by shooting.

The execution ground was a garden, or yard, in Brussels, surrounded by a wall. The German firing party of six men and an officer was drawn up in the garden and awaited the victim. She was led in by soldiers from the house nearby, blindfolded with a black scarf. Up to this minute the woman, though deathly white, had stepped out bravely to meet her fate, but before the rifle party her strength at last gave out and she tottered and fell to the ground, 30 yards or more from the spot where she was to have been shot.

The officer in charge of the execution walked to her as she lay on the ground motionless. He drew a large service revolver from his belt, took steady aim from his knee and shot the woman through the head. The firing party looked on as the officer quietly returned his revolver to its case and ordered the soldiers to carry the body to the house, where it was taken in charge by a Belgian woman, acting under instruction of the Spanish Minister, who had undertaken the responsibility for the body, pending arrangements for burial.

The execution has shocked the whole Belgian community and is spoken of as the most savage act of the war.

The destroyers are to be delivered in 18 to 20 months and the submarines will be turned over to the Government within two years.
