

A HARRISBURG INTERVIEW

Mrs. Powley Tells Her Experience

The following brief account of an interview with a Harrisburg woman over four years ago, and its sequel, will be read with keen interest by every citizen.

Mrs. G. F. Powley, 1329 N. Second street, Harrisburg, says: "I suffered from my back and my kidneys didn't act properly. A dull, gnawing pain in the small of my back, made it impossible to stand long and I felt depressed. I did not sleep well from nervousness and the kidney secretions annoyed me. I had pains in my head and it hurt me to lift anything. Doan's Kidney Pills removed the whole annoyance."

Over four years later, Mrs. Powley said: "I have had no recurrence of any of the symptoms of kidney trouble since I was benefited by Doan's Kidney Pills."

CARSON LEAVES POST IN CABINET

Resignation Given as First Proof of Differences Among British Advisers

By Associated Press

London, Oct. 19, 11.35 A. M.—Britain is waiting anxiously to learn whether the cabinet ministers will be able to compose their differences and continue the government without swapping horses in midstream. The military difficulties which confront the allies have taken a position of secondary importance for the time being.

The cabinet has been holding long and frequent meetings since the Balkan crisis developed. Both newspapers and politicians agree that vital differences of opinion have arisen over the conscription issue and the Near East question. In the meantime party newspapers are carrying on a bitter debate and exchanging accusations of lack of patriotism and of placing party and private interests above those of the country.

The resignation of Sir Edward Carson, attorney general, was the first proof of differences in the cabinet. The reason assigned for his withdrawal is disagreement with the cabinet's policy in regard to the Near East, but the specific point of division is withheld, as in the case of the resignation of Foreign Minister Delcasse of France, in whose footsteps Sir Edward appears to follow.

Speaking in Dublin last night, John Redmond declared the position of the coalition government was precarious. "Any day we may be faced with another reconstruction," he said, "or with proposals which would end instantly the political truce and would rend the British people into contending factions."

WILLIAM BLAKE AND CATHARINE

In studying Blake one comes often upon patronizing, if approving, references to his wife, Catharine Blake, who is characterized as a devoted but ignorant woman. These leave one mainly unprepared for her picture, produced in Mr. Russell's edition of the Letters, from a drawing made when she was over sixty, for it affords a glimpse of a remarkable personality. The strength of the face, the spirit power of the mouth, the unflinching gaze of the eyes, give it a profound impressiveness, making one wonder at Mr. Symonds' characterization of it as "aimless, painful, and a Mr. Crab Robinson's reference to Catharine Blake's "dark eye and remains of beauty in her youth." This is full of beauty that youth does not know, and it is not the remains of anything, but is suggestive of immortal beginnings. The eyes are visionary, but unlike Blake's; he was a man of many visions, she a woman of one, and it was he. For he was her life-long vision from the first glimpse of him when, as a girl, she came into a room and saw him, in all the glory of young hood, with his hair as black as jet and golden locks like the sun's rays about his head. Before either had spoken, she knew him as her destined husband, and growing faint, had to leave the room to recover herself.

These two young mortals, alike in their instant certainties of knowledge, were married in 1782; then began a married life of radiant poverty, a life which has perhaps no parallel, from that of Adam and Eve in Paradise down to that of Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning at Casa Guidi, Florence, for joyousness and intensity of devotion. Catharine Blake, bright-eyed, dark-haired, tall and graceful, served her husband as model for images of earthly and of celestial beauty; did all the housework; learned, under his tuition, to write, and did copying for him; learned to help print engravings and color illuminated books; the two walked together whole summer days in the country, dining by twilight at some wayside inn; so was she cook, housewife, fellow-engraver, fellow-seer, and fellow-wayfarer on earthly and on celestial paths.

This accounts for the "sympathy and awe" in her pictured face, the solemn vision of those eyes, thrilled through with the light of the will, the hushed look of responsibilities. Margaret Sherwood in the North American Review.
