

NEW SCHOOLS TO BE OPENED SOON

State Vocational Experts Are Receiving Encouragement in Their Campaign

Officials of the State Bureau of Vocational Education, which is paving the way for the inauguration of the child labor law with its continuation features, with the assistance of officers from the Department of Labor and Industry, have been in touch with school districts in over half the manufacturing communities in the State and in the next six weeks will complete their campaign of preparation. It is stated by the officials that school authorities and employers have arranged for co-operation in the opening of continuation schools in a number of towns in the coal, iron and steel and small manufacturing towns. The bureau has put out a circular stating that last year, who will be a juvenile worker between 14 and 16, must attend school eight hours a week, either eight hours in one day, four hours on each of two days or if thought advisable instruction may be given continuously provided the number of hours runs to eight hours a week during a school year. The schools are to be approved by State authorities and may be in either school houses or factories. The schedule of aid from the State for school districts, under the extra million dollars added to the school appropriation last year, is as follows: Each class A teacher for continuation schools $200; each class B teacher, $150, and for fixed vocational work or for variable vocational work or for equipment for academic work fifty per cent of cost. Class A teachers are those with three years' experience in Pennsylvania schools. The work of bringing manufacturers and employers into the new State system is being carried on through chambers of commerce and similar organizations and local school boards are being urged to prepare for the inauguration of schools where needed.

RAT DAMAGE PUT AT $5,000,000 NOW Dr. Surface Says That Farmers Can Save Millions if They Will Go Right at It Rats are costing the people of Pennsylvania over $5,000,000 a year dead loss, over half of which is to farmers and fruit growers, according to State Zoologist H. A. Surface, who has launched a campaign of education to get rid of the pests with the approval of Secretary of Agriculture Charles E. Patton. Dr. Surface says there are fifteen ways of getting rid of the rodents and that the city folks are as much interested as the farmers. Among the ways he suggests are encouraging snakes, owls, hawks and weasels where they do not do too much damage in other directions, train cats to be barn pets instead of house pets, use poisons, keep rat terriers and finally form rat killing clubs. Dr. Surface makes some interesting calculations about the damage done by rats. On the assumption that there are 225,000 farms in the State the loss to farmers must be at least $10 a year; the loss to fruit growers and to people having other crops in the field runs probably $10,000 to a county or $870,000 more. On top of this must be piled the damage done in grain warehouses, stores and other places without counting in the intangible loss due to the carrying of disease by rats. The rat is a worse pest than the scale or any of the other things which worry the farmers and the fruit and vegetable dealer.
