MISS LEMER HOME FROM WAR ZONE

Tells of Woman's Valor, Self Sacrifice, Confidence, and Great Love of Country

Miss Mary Lemer, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lerue Lemer, arrived at her home, 213 South Front street, last evening after a two-year absence in France.

Miss Lemer, who, soon after her graduation from Wellesley College, opened the School for American Girls in Paris with two other Wellesley graduates, sold out her interests in 1914 and came home for a little vacation.

Miss Lemer owns a country property in Normandy, near Verangeville, four miles from Dieppe, the important shipping port which the Germans had vowed to capture on their way to Paris, which they haven't reached yet.

Here all is peace and quiet and only people who own their homes are permitted to stay; even guests are forbidden, for fear of spies, and strangers are passed on at once.

Of course the men of the country are all away and the women have taken up their work as far as possible, often in the most serious ways.

All the churches have been turned into hospitals and convalescent soldiers are seen on every hand.

The women correspond with soldiers, some of whom have not heard from their own families since enlisting; they send them supplies, necessities, books and comforts.

Miss Lemer and Miss Cable are unable to speak about for they are in honor bound not to do so.

They went to Vienna at one time to visit Miss Cable's sister, who is the wife of an Austrian army officer. Here there was danger of the food supplies giving out, and so bread was rationed to individuals, three hard, black pieces being one's share a day.

In contrast to this, at Verangeville, there is full and plenty. The people feel safe and while the American flag flies over Miss Cable's chateau, they know this government is protecting them.

Harrisburg friends of Miss Lemer sent large boxes of supplies to the American Hospital in Paris, at her solicitation, last year. They reached there safely and were much appreciated.

Miss Lemer says there is no feeling of depression among the women, who are calm, confident and courageous to a superhuman degree.

Those who have lost property, husbands, sons and other relatives accept their lot feeling that nothing is too much for them to give for the life of their beloved country.

Near Verangeville are schools removed from other districts and the women are especially interested in these children. One hundred girls from 6 to 12 years old were recently brought from the village of Thann, in Alsace, with an interpreter for none of them could speak French.

They had no clothing but what was on their backs, and they were a poor, frightened, forlorn lot. They took possession of an old hotel and now the nuns are teaching them just as though there was no war.

Two hundred boys from Ypres have also been brought in with their teachers, nuns who were turned from their burned convents and schools, sometimes sleeping in cellars and undergoing worse privations.

These boys are like a lot of wild Indians, Miss Lemer says, and they need clothing and comforts. Pencils, books, tablets and the like, useful in lessons, are supplied by kind friends.

It is difficult to go about the country unless one is well known, but when Miss Lemer and Miss Cable decided to come to America for a visit they had little trouble in making their arrangements.

They sailed from Bordeaux, France, February 26 on the French liner Chicago and sailed dark all the way. Indeed, they didn't know just the time of sailing, but boarded the boat and awaited the starting.

All the portholes were darkened and no fog horn was sounded during the voyage. They were careful to keep out of danger and the passengers were told nothing by the ship's officers.

If they passed a boat, no mention was made of the fact, and silence surrounded every movement. The boat was overdue in New York, but nothing eventful occurred on the voyage.

Miss Lemer and Miss Cable will visit their relatives in America for a time and then hope to return to France, their adopted country, and their peaceful home there in the mountains.
