

An Offer By Local Druggists

Now Have New "External" Treatment That They Are Selling on 30-Days' Trial.

Money Refunded If It Does Not Relieve Cold Troubles Quicker Than Internal Medicines.

The leading druggists, whose names are given below, have recently imported from the South the new external treatment, known as Vick's "Vap-O-Rub" Salve. No one knows better than the trained chemist the injurious effect of "internal" medicines, especially on children. In order to demonstrate to their customers the advantages of this external treatment, these druggists have arranged to sell Vick's in either 25c, 50c, or $1.00 sizes on 30 days' trial, giving with each sale a refund blank, good for your money back if you are not delighted.

For croup and cold troubles Vick's "Vap-O-Rub" is applied over the throat and chest, covering with a warm flannel cloth. The vapors released by the body heat quickly loosen the choking phlegm, and clear the air passages. In severe cases, first apply hot wet towels to open the pores. Vick's is then absorbed through the skin, taking out the tightness and soreness. Croup is usually relieved in fifteen minutes, and the worst colds commonly over night.

This double treatment—absorption through the skin and inhalation as a vapor, makes Vick's useful for a wide range of troubles, from head colds, asthma and catarrh, down to sore throat, bronchitis, hacking coughs and deep chest colds.

DRINK HOT WATER IF YOU DESIRE A ROSY COMPLEXION

Says we can't help but look better and feel better after an inside bath.

To look one's best and feel one's best is to enjoy an inside bath each morning to flush from the system the previous day's waste, sour fermentations and poisonous toxins before it is absorbed into the blood. Just as coal, when it burns, leaves behind a certain amount of incombustible material in the form of ashes, so the food and drink taken each day leave in the alimentary organs a certain amount of indigestible material, which if not eliminated, form toxins and poisons which are then sucked into the blood through the very ducts which are intended to suck in only nourishment to sustain the body.

If you want to see the glow of healthy bloom in your cheeks, to see your skin get clearer and clearer, you are told to drink every morning upon arising, a glass of hot water with a teaspoonful of limestone phosphate in it, which is a harmless means of washing the waste material and toxins from the stomach, liver, kidneys and bowels, thus cleansing, sweetening and purifying the entire alimentary tract, before putting more food into the stomach.

Men and women with sallow skins, liver spots, pimples, or pallid complexion, also those who wake up with a coated tongue, bad taste, nasty breath, others who are bothered with headaches, bilious spells, acid stomach or constipation should begin this phosphate hot water drinking and are assured of very pronounced results in one or two weeks.

A quarter pound of limestone phosphate costs very little at the drug store but is sufficient to demonstrate that just as soap and hot water cleanses, purifies and freshens the skin on the outside, so hot water and limestone phosphate act on the inside organs. We must always consider that internal sanitation is vastly more important than outside cleanliness, because the skin pores do not absorb impurities into the blood, while the bowels pores do.—Advertisement.

The Corsican Sisters

Plot by George Bronson Howard. Novelization by Hugh C. Weir. Copyright Kalem Company.

In a moment he found himself in step beside her—and unrebuked! He had not dared to hope for such luck. But as he looked at her he was sure that she was impressed. He ventured to suggest tea at a nearby hotel. She blushed—but she yielded to his urging. "I cannot imagine why I am so unconventional!" she said nervously. "I am a little afraid—Picture it—I, alone here, far from my native Corsica—but just finished with my studies at Vassar!"

But when they parted he had her address and her permission to call. Here, Mona and Mary alike were certain, was the crisis of the adventure. Would he call? Or would he have a sober second thought that would warn him that he, a well known figure, and enormously wealthy, took a certain risk in calling on a girl he had met in such a fashion, and of whom he knew less than nothing? They need have had no fear, however. Jimmy Harrasford had faults enough, but cowardice was not among them. He took advantage of his permission to call on the day following his first encounter with Mona—and from the moment of his coming there could be no mistaking his purpose to make love to her.

"Mona—let me check him, to reproach him gently. "But why?" he asked. "Why shouldn't I tell you you are beautiful? You are! Why shouldn't I tell you that I have never seen anyone so attractive to me as you?"

For answer, Mona picked up the hand he had laid upon her arm. "That is a so curious ring!" she exclaimed.

"Just an old signet—heirloom in my family," he said. "I wouldn't lose it for a hundred times its value, though. The luck of the Harrasfords is supposed to go with it. I'm just superstitious enough to believe that I'd have a lot of bad luck if it disappeared."

Mona clasped her hands. "Oh—and so few of you Americans believe such things!" she cried. "In my country we are full of such ideas as that signet we have, and many such things!"

But Harrasford was not to be so easily diverted from his purpose. He began once more to make ardent love to Mona, and she sighed.

"I have kept love from my life so long that I fear—you make me afraid—shall I be able to resist you?"

"Why try?" he said eagerly. "But just then there was an interruption. A key turned in the door, and Mary came in. Like Mona she was transformed; and in her case the transformation was strikingly becoming. Harrasford, when the introduction was over, stared at her in fascinated surprise. He had been almost infatuated with Mona—now Mary, it seemed to him, was even more beautiful and desirable.

"Good—I'd like 'em both!" he thought.

And Mary, to his delight, proved quick to understand the language of his ardent eyes. They exchanged glances that were full of meaning; Mary looked significantly at the unconscious Mona, as if to warn her. Then she went into the other room, and Mona, seemingly anxious to keep him at bay, picked up a book and began to read aloud. Then Mary came back, and Mona looked up—

Just in time to see the caressing touch with which her 'sister,' as she passed Harrasford's chair, touched his hair.

Instantly she sprang up, seemingly beside herself with rage. "You viper!" she screamed, while Harrasford started up in horrified amazement and Mary shrank covering away. "So you would steal him from me!"

"I say!" began Harrasford, protestingly. "Be still, you!" she cried, turning on him furiously. She advanced threateningly upon Mary. "Go!" she cried. "Out of my sight, you treacherous one!"

Mary turned toward her room. "Oh, I say!" said Harrasford again. "Come—you don't mean that! You're not going to send her away for such a reason as that—"

"Is it not reason enough?" cried Mona furiously. "She shall go—this night—this minute! Never shall she enter my sight again!"

And Mary, with what seemed to Harrasford an astonishing meekness and an unnecessary degree of terror, prepared to obey. She packed a bag and went to the door. As she passed he whispered to her:

"Telephone to me at the Empire Club tomorrow at noon."

Then Harrasford, after Mary had nodded and gone, turned to Mona. He intended to reproach her, but he found her sobbing wildly on the couch. And for the first time in his career he was puzzled and a little afraid.

"I couldn't bear to have her try to take you from me!" sobbed Mona. "It is so she would act when I have known you such a little while!"

"But I don't want to be taken, you know," said Harrasford—suddenly realizing that he had progressed faster, evidently, than had dared to hope he might. "You're the one I care for, my dear!"
