GOING OVER TO GRANGE
Special to the Telegraph
 Huntingdon, Pa., May 9. — During the past week two locals of the Farmers' Society of Equity, Boyles Run and Fisher's Ferry, both near Sunbury, severed their connection with that organization and united with the Grange. The transfer was effected through the work of W. F. Hill, past master of the Pennsylvania State Grange.

HOGS HAVE CHOLERA
Special to the Telegraph
 Warnersboro, Pa., May 9.—A carload of hogs shipped to this place more than a month ago, which were purchased about Shippensburg and Scotland by a livestock dealer and subsequently sold to parties in this vicinity at a stock sale, proves to have been an unfortunate investment, because a number of the hogs have since died of cholera.

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

Married Women and Young Adorers

By ELLA WHEELER WILSON
 There are scores of married women who find the attention of very young men agreeable—women who, perhaps, have watched the waning of romance in the eyes of their husbands and who, after a decade of years, when life has seemed verging toward the commonplace, suddenly realize that they possess the power to attract some younger man and to stir his interest with a feeling stronger than friendship.

Almost every woman possessed of any mental or physical charms has had the opportunity for such an experience.

Too often this opportunity has been seized, and the youth has been led on to make a young girl of his fantasy, which flatters the woman's vanity, while she has been quite unconscious that she herself was playing an old role of an older fool.

Occasionally a woman possesses the good sense and the pride and the self-respect to curb impulses of the too romantic youth before they develop too far, and to change him from an adoring swain into a delightful friend.

One such man tells of the treatment received at the hands of a married woman with whom he became hopelessly in love, shortly after leaving college; and he shows her letter, written in answer to an impassioned missive which had sent him one night, after sitting beside her at dinner.

Not till years afterward did he show the letter—for when it was first received, he hid his pride and wounded his vanity.

Here are some extracts from her letter—a letter which it might be well for many a woman to copy and use in similar situations:

"I happen to be a woman whose heart life is complete," wrote the lady. "I have realized my dreams, and I have no desire to change them to nightmares. I like the original role in life's drama, too; and that of the really happy and well-behaved wife seems to me less hackneyed than that of the misunderstood woman who needs a friend."

"I find the steady flame of one lamp better to read life's meaning by than the flicking light of many candles. You are passing through a phase which comes to nearly every youth. You are in love with love, and your affectionate nature is in that transition period where an older woman appeals to you."

"Being crude and unformed, a mature mind and body attract you. Any middle-aged man of your acquaintance will tell you that he had a similar experience at your age.

"If you had been thrown with any other woman just as you have been thrown with me, the same result would have followed. So while I am not flattered by your feeling for me, knowing it to be no tribute to my attractions, I am glad, for your sake, that it was myself and not some less happy or more selfish woman who would have allowed you to proceed along the path of youthful folly."

"Few boys of twenty-two are capable of knowing what they want in a life companion, and ten years from now your ideal will have utterly changed."

"When you say that you wish you had met me when I was free, I am obliged to smile; for when I was free you were rolling a hoop along the pavement and wearing knickerbockers."

"If I were free now, think how ridiculous it would make you and me to have you an acknowledged lover. How shortly you would awaken from your illusion—which you call love—and see me as I am, twelve years your senior."

"Men of your age have married women of my age, and for a year or two, perhaps, they have been happy; but when the man reached my age and the woman was still a dozen years his senior, the man was miserable and the woman wretched, almost invariably."

"It is an unnatural situation; and you want to thank God and me that it is impossible one for you."

"Your heart will no doubt experience many loves before you find the mate intended for you by the Divine Power."

"Do not take yourself or your youthful passions too seriously, and do not let yourself be compromised by a married woman; and do not allow any compromise one."

"You will find many restless wives ready and willing to take the romantic attentions of a handsome youth; but they are not women who will be worthy influences in your life."

"Put this letter away and keep it until you can write and thank me for it; you will be able to do this in time."

"Do not answer it; and when we meet be my good sensible friend, and one I can introduce to my husband, for only such do I care to know."

"I have no desire to change the way I was after the young man was happily married that he showed this letter to his friends and permitted these extracts to be given to the world."

Nan of Music Mountain, by Frank H. Spearman, author of "Whispering Smith." (Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.35 net.)

Nothing better has been done in reproduction of the life of the frontier West, the life that is rapidly passing with the advance of civilization, than a story with thrills in every chapter, a masterpiece of vivid portraiture, an epic of the wild western hills. The heroine is a member of an outlaw family and her love for a man whose life is devoted to exterminating her clan is the central theme of an absorbing story. There is not a dull page in the book.

cannot gain by his own efforts in competition with his fellowmen."

We as a country will have the problem to face squarely at the close of the European war, when the period of readjustment comes. The problem is in this book taken up with a frank admission of prejudice by this capitalist, but with a clear diction and convincing argument without. Many believe that Socialism does not present either a just or practical remedy for social and industrial evils, and these persons will be confirmed in their conviction, that these troubles are rooted in individual character and to be removed only by education.

Equality of opportunity is held to be the ideal solution of the problem that is involved, but the rule of the many by the few for thousands of years is convincing evidence, likewise revealed in many another way, that a theoretically correct proposition oftentimes will not work out to a practical solution by reason of conditions. To change conditions is the only answer, and education is the means. "The natural law of the survival of the fittest cannot be changed by human legislation," continues the capitalist writer, and education tending to make men more nearly equal in ability is the true remedy.

The Violin Lady, by Daisy Rhodes Campbell. (The Page Company, Boston.)

The "Violin Lady" is a young American artist who is studying in Paris. Having completed her course she goes to London on a concert tour, accompanied by a young friend who is gifted with a remarkable voice. Her masculine admirers are many and varied, but she eludes them all and returns to Paris to find her "true love" awaiting her. Although hailed by all the critics as a genius, she reaches the conclusion that marriage is her destiny and so marries her lover and comes back to America.

It must be admitted that while the book is pleasant and harmless, it is unconvincing and quite uninteresting in spots. The story is a mere succession of incidents, lacks cohesiveness and force and portrays characters that are unreal and artificial. The redeeming characteristic is the evident knowledge of music which the author shows.

COME QUICKLY

I know a physician who grabbed his satchel in a hurry and started for the house of a man who called his telephone number and then whispered: "Come quickly. I cannot live without you." But the "patient" was calling for a doctor's daughter.—The Silent Partner.

Among the American authors whose work is considered in an article on The Great American Novel, published in the Bulletin of the New York Public Library, are found Winston Churchill, Owen Wister, Jack London, Robert Herrick and Mary S. Watts. "It is a mistake," says the editor, "to deplore the condition of American fiction. There have been greater writers but never at one time in this country a more worthy group."

The Whirligig of Time, by Wayland Wells Williams. (F. A. Stokes' Company, N. Y.)

The significance of the three letters, W. W. W., heretofore confined so exclusively and characteristically to the present administration in the mediaeval of our Chief Executive's name, and his "watchful waiting" policy, has taken a new turn in introducing to a novel-loving public the initial endeavor of a young graduate of Yale University, who has submitted his first and worthy literary attempt "The Whirligig of Time."

Mr. Williams, an erstwhile member of the editorial staff of the New York Evening Post, has been more or less closely connected with the scenes whereof he speaks, having lived in New Haven, graduated from Yale in 1910, spent a year in Paris and another at the University of Munich. His novel deals with two brothers, of opposite dispositions, but drawn closely together by a bond that refuses oftentimes to let them spend their hearts to one another. Their careers are followed from the death of their mother through their school years, to the assumption of business care and marriage. Two more interesting characters cannot be imagined. To an undergraduate or alumnus of Yale, the story presents possibilities for infinite enjoyment. The atmosphere of Yale is correctly depicted, and two very sharply defined classes of individuals outlined in the character delineation as applied to the two brothers. There is humor, imagination and life in the work of the young novelist, and a great many of the weaknesses which are usually so obvious in the early attempts of a coming writer are not discernible in this work. Mr. Williams shows great promise.

A Fine Aid For Mother-to-be

We are all greatly indebted to those who tell their experiences. And among the many things which we read about and are of immediate importance to the expectant mother, is a splendid external remedy called "Mother's Friend." This is applied over the muscles of the stomach. It is deeply penetrating in its influence. Mothers everywhere tell of its soothing effect, how it allays pains incident to stretching of connective ligaments and muscles. They tell of restful comfort of calm, peaceful nights, an absence of those distressing peculiarities to the period of expectancy, relief from morning sickness, no more of that apprehension with which so many young women's minds become burdened. It is a splendid help. Get a bottle of "Mother's Friend" from your nearest druggist. Ask your husband to get it for you. Then write to Bradford Regard Co., 408 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for a very handsome and instructive book. It is filled with suggestive ideas of great help to all women interested in the subject of maternity. The best of all are some letters from mothers that are real inspirations. Write today.

INDUSTRIES FOR MONT ALTO
Special to the Telegraph
 Waynesboro, Pa., May 9. — It was announced recently that Mont Alto, just a little to the north of Waynesboro, would have, in the near future, a shirt factory, State bank, water system, and, in all probability, electric lights furnished by the Wayne Electric Light and Power Co. At least three of these propositions are now a practical reality—the factory, bank and water system, with another industry in sight and the light question as good as settled.

SUFFRAGISTS TO CONTINUE USE OF YELLOW SLIPS

The little "yellow slip" which has served so satisfactorily as a means of indicating sentiment for woman's suffrage and which the executive board of the Pennsylvania Woman Suffrage association had decided to do away with, will be retained after all. Notice to this effect was issued to-day. Mrs. Edger B. Orady, State president of the Suffrage association, The executive board had decided to substitute the regular white paper petition instead of the yellow slips at circuses, fairs and other outdoor gatherings.

Why that Gas-bomb Trail

Ever tag along in the wake of a smoke-sputtering, gas-coughing car or truck that had you sputtering and coughing in turn? Yes, we all have. And more than once we could have been arrested for what we thought of the driver in the car ahead. With careful driving and proper lubrication, cars should not smoke—with the emphasis on "proper lubrication."

Atlantic Polarine is "proper lubrication" for 8 out of 10 cars. It is the famous year-round oil that is exactly right under all driving conditions.

In all alternative cases, one of the other three principal motor oils—Atlantic "Light," Atlantic "Medium," or Atlantic "Heavy"—is the one to use.

Here is a group of four motor oils produced by the oldest and largest manufacturers of lubricating oils in the entire world.

The group is a result of patient research and experimentation conducted in a manner that a plant of smaller size and equipment could not have attempted. Motor experts and oil specialists seriously recommend these oils as the correct lubricants for YOU.

In actual tests it has been demonstrated that a properly lubricated car will often yield as much as five more miles to the gallon of gasoline.

Ask your garageman which of these four oils is best suited to your particular car, then buy that oil—and use it.

Read up on this subject. We have published a handsome and comprehensive book about lubrication. It is free. Ask your garage for it. If they cannot supply you, drop us a postal and the book will be sent you without charge.
