More Inducements to Use Postal Savings Bank

Further inducements to depositors to place their money with the United States Postal Savings Department, are announced in a bulletin effective today. The notice comes through Postmaster Frank C. Sites and is as follows:

"Large postal savings deposits will now be accepted at the Post Office. This is made possible by an important amendment to the postal savings act just approved by President Wilson. A postal savings depositor may now have an account amounting to $1,000 upon which interest will be paid."

"Formerly $500 was the maximum amount he could have to his credit. This enlargement of postal savings facilities will be very gratifying to thousands of depositors who have already reached the old $500 limit and are anxious to entrust more of their savings to Uncle Sam.

"Another feature of the amendment that will avoid further embarrassment to the public and to postal officials is the doing away with the limit on the amount that could be accepted from a depositor monthly. Under the old law only $100 could be deposited in a calendar month.

"The amendment abolishes this restriction. While the postal savings system has already proved a signal success as is shown by the fact that more than half a million depositors have only eighty million dollars standing to their credit, still it has fallen short of meeting the full demands of the public because of the restrictions which have now been eliminated. Postmaster General Burleson and Third Assistant Postmaster General Dockery have been tireless in their efforts to secure a modification of the limitations and the new liberalizing legislation is particularly gratifying to them."

PEDESTRIANS MUST TAKE CARE

Supreme Court Lays Down the Law in an Important Decision in Erie Case

Justice Robert Von Moschizker, of the supreme court, in an opinion handed down late yesterday afternoon laid down the law in regard to pedestrians walking on highways, holding that those crossing except at regular crossings must use great care and those walking in roadways must exercise the greatest vigilance.

The opinion was given in upholding the Erie county court in non-suiting an action in which the widow of Antonio Virgilio, a city street cleaner, fatally hurt by an automobile, sued for damages. The justice says in his opinion: "The law requires that every person shall take due care for the safety of himself and others according to the circumstances in which he is placed. Vehicles have the right of way on the portion of the highway set apart for them, but at crossings all drivers, particularly of motor vehicles, must be highly vigilant and maintain such control that, on the shortest possible notice, they can stop their cars so as to prevent danger to pedestrians; on the other hand, pedestrians must be highly vigilant and maintain a standard of care, although, of course, they must be constantly on the lookout for the safety of others. While conditions have not yet arisen in any case brought before us where we have felt called upon to rule that it was negligence for a pedestrian to traverse a public highway between the regular crossing places, nevertheless, when he does so he is bound to a high degree of care, and if a pedestrian goes further and deliberately selects the roadway of a city street for the purpose of walking longitudinally thereon, he is obligated to still greater care; in fact, one placing himself in such danger must be most vigilant to look after his own safety."

Just before adjourning to meet in Philadelphia on July 1 the court handed down a per curiam opinion dismissing the appeal in the Pennsylvania Utilities-Lehigh Navigation Electric case in which a former opinion was withdrawn yesterday. The new opinion affects charter rights and is as follows: "As it did not affirmatively appear that the Lehigh Navigation Electric company, had not prior to January 1, 1914, the date when the Public Service company act went into effect, actually commenced to exercise its franchises in the territory covered by its charter the court below did not err in dismissing the appeal from the Public Service commission decision."

Mona Hartley and Mary Burnett surveyed, with something like loathing, the menu that was to serve them for dinner. A few buns, a package of crackers, a bottle of milk. Filling enough for such a party, but it was neither appetizing or satisfying in any real sense and their surroundings would have amazed those who had known them in the days of their prosperity. They were in a cheap room of a cheap lodging house, and their belongings had been reduced to a minimum. The landlady had been insistent in demanding the rent.

"Oh!" said Mona, despairingly, as she picked up a bun. "Mary—if we could only have a real dinner—in a place where the waiters know what you want before you do yourself, and the linen is clean and the silver bright—"

"Don't!" said Mary sharply. "It only makes it seem worse if we think of things like that."

"Oh, I know," said Mona. "Mary, something has got to turn up pretty soon. We've had a real dinner—once had such a run of luck since we first decided that we had a right to make the world pay us the living it owes the poor."

"Buns again?" said Mary, next day. She looked regretfully at the single slice of ham she had bought for a special dinner. "Come on—let's dine out! We'll buy our buns and get a new menu in the park or some place like that!"

The Landlady Insistently Demanded the Rent.

"All right," said Mary, listlessly. "I saw a store yesterday where the buns looked bigger than at the place we've been going to. Let's try them. It's important events have hung on decisions as trifling and as wholly devoid of importance as this. One of the two girls to try a new baker. While they were selecting their buns they saw a young man who was giving an order at the counter. He was a handsome young man, with a touch of the Bohemian about him. And Mona, peering at him, was convinced that she had seen him somewhere in the past. He paid no attention to either of the girls, but she noticed that he kept his left hand carefully in his pocket. But an accident, the dropping of some of the coins he received in an envelope, compelled him to remove it and now Mary's attention was attracted as well as Mona's. Both were struck by the curious tattooed design on the back of the hand—a design familiar to them as the Devil's Sign, consisting of a small diamond on an inverted cross. But it was only Mona who seemed to see any real significance in the design. "What's that?" she asked, and they both followed him.

"But why?" asked Mary, when they were on his trail.

"And if I am right I believe we're not wasting our time. There's no reason why he should follow us, is there? There's nothing else that we have to do this is more promising."

"I suppose not," said Mary. "But that doesn't mean much."

Even when the young man turned in at the impressive entrance of the Columbian Art Museum, Mona hastened on following him. And when she saw him sit down before a certain picture, unpack a small satchel, and set to work copying the picture, she was greatly excited.

"Come on," said Mona. "I want to see the picture. I think I know it, but I want to make sure."

"It's the Mona Vannal!" said Mary, after they had slipped up behind the painter without attracting his attention, and glimpsed the name-plate on the picture.

"I thought so!" said Mona, triumphantly. "Come on—I want to show you something in the catalogue."

"There!" she said. "Raphaelo—Mona Vannal—1522. Considered by many to represent the greatest phase of the master. Loaned to the Columbian Collection by the Hon. J. C. Croghan. Value estimated at $125,000."

"I don't see what good it does us," said Mary, practically.

"Well, now I know who that young chap is who is copying it! Harry the Hun, Mary—the most famous picture thief in the world! He's doing impossible things, and he's never been caught—and held. If he's copying that picture it's because he means to steal it."

"Well—that's his business," said Mary. "I still don't see where we come in."

"If we know what he's planning to do—why isn't there a chance for us to cut in somehow?" asked Mona. "We can surely find some way to profit by what we've found out! And I don't mean giving him away, either."

To Be Continued Tomorrow.

United States Tread Chain Tires

Thick Rubber Anti-Skid Chains for Long Service

These rubber chains and the perfected United States Tire carcass construction are what make the 'Chain' Tread the most efficient, moderate priced anti-skid tire made today.

The thickness of the two chains of rubber running around the tread is what gives the extra wear of 'Chain' Treads.

The position of these rubber chains on the tread gives the remarkable traction and anti-skid qualities and additional wear, for which 'Chain' Treads are famous.

The 'Chain' is one of five United States 'Balanced' Tires which meet every motoring condition of price and use.

Ask the nearest United States Tire Dealer for your copy of the booklet, "Judging Tires," which tells how to find the particular tire to suit your needs.

PRISONERS CHAINED TO TREE

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., May 24.—Six fishermen who were using an outline in violation of law were rounded up by Game Commissioner George Deitrick and Fish Warden W. W. Davis. Four of the men were handcuffed and chained to a tree, while two other fishermen were being caught. The men arrested were each fined $22.50 and costs.
