NOT YET TIME FOR PEACE, GREY

Cannot Consider Terms Without Agreement Between Entente.

Special to the Telegraph

London, May 25.—In a speech in the House of Commons on the question of peace and the propriety of "employing the American press as a platform," subject unexpectedly raised by Arthur Ponsonby, Liberal member for Stirling, Scotland, in a strong address attacking the government for allowing diplomatic etiquette to stand in the way of possible peace negotiations, Sir Edward Grey, the British Foreign Secretary, set aside all ideas that peace negotiations were possible at the present stage and plainly reiterated that the position of the Allies was in no way changed.

Sir Edward declared that it was impossible to consider terms of peace without a previous agreement between the Entente Allies. Further, he expressed the decided opinion that the hostilities had not reached a stage where it was possible to talk of peace, especially as the German government was constantly being "fed with lies" by their ministers.

Against Proposing War

Mr. Ponsonby's reference to the use of the American press as a "platform" was the outgrowth of a recent interview with Sir Edward Grey. Sir Edward in replying to this attack, while admitting that important disclosures of policy ought first to be made to Parliament, argued that a crisis might arise during the war when considerations of etiquette should not be allowed to stand in the way. He contended that since German statements constantly were giving interviews and statements to the American press, it would be mere pedantry which would hinder British statements from counterbalancing the statements in the interest of their own country.

Time Not Ripe, Says Grey

Sir Edward Grey, in replying, pointed out that his interview contained no such declarations. He had no prepared speech or statement to make, but he said if he thought the German government or opinion had reached the point where the allied governments could bring a peace compatible with their desires nearer by making speeches about peace, he would make dozens of them. But, the foreign minister added, that time has not yet arrived, and the Allies were bound by common obligations not to put forward any terms of peace except by mutual agreement.

Sir Edward Grey, in the course of his speech characterized Chancellor von Bethmann-Hollweg's recent statement that Great Britain was prepared to go to war over Bosnia as a "first class lie." The real reason for the prolongation of the war was that the German government was constantly telling their people that they were winning the war and that the Allies were beaten.
