

TURKEYS FEWER IN PENNSYLVANIA

Poultry Expert Says That the Farmers Are Not Raising Enough Nowadays

According to reports which are reaching the State Department of Agriculture, there has been a marked decrease in the number of turkeys raised on the farms in Pennsylvania...

Mr. Wittman further believes that until turkeys have at least some of their old-time vigor and ability to live, no eggs should be incubated in a machine or under a chicken hen...

BORIC ACID MUST BE REGULATED

Secretary Patton Gets Started After People Who Have Been Using the Stuff

Owing to the high price of benzoate of soda, the packers of shredded codfish and other dried fish have been using preservative boric acid or borates and some of the food products so treated may make their appearance in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture will not allow fish or other foods treated with boric acid to be sold within the State.

government in allowing the temporary use of boric acid destroys the uniformity in food laws and that in all likelihood the New England dried fish shippers using boric acid will send their products into this State.
