

OF INTEREST TO THE WOMEN

"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

"I wish we weren't going," said Warren disagreeably. "I can't for the life of me see why you will insist upon accepting invitations in weather like this."

"It's a great place, all right," agreed Warren. "It certainly knocks the conventional boarding place right in the head."

"But, dear, you said just last night that you thought we ought to accept. That's the news to me," said Warren. "But you did say so, Warren, and if any one minds the heat you know I do."

"How is the food, dear?" asked Helen. "Simply great," Grace responded. Helen hoped it would be as good as her friend promised. She did want Warren to be glad he had come and to really enjoy everything, but she had her doubts about a boardinghouse meal.

Gradually the people of the house gathered in the large drawing room. They were a nice, wholesome crowd that Helen enjoyed meeting again. She could not help thinking what a strange difference there was between this boardinghouse and the kind she had always read about, where there was a delicious smell of cabbage and onions, and where the people were of ludicrous types.

WARREN LIKES IT. They all went into the big cool dining-room filled with small tables, another agreeable surprise. The man on Helen's left was very entertaining, and by the time they had finished a delicious course of creamed mushrooms and sweetbread, a dish that Warren was extremely fond of, Helen was sure that he was actually enjoying himself. So far as she was concerned, she was having a good time. She was cooler than she had been at dinner in their own apartment for the past week, and the food was extraordinary.

"That's just it," Warren said quickly. "After all, it doesn't take much extra to keep a crowd of people well fed and well housed; just a little additional care and the old boardinghouse bugbear could be dispelled altogether."

"Whether one is a tennis enthusiast or a lover of golf or delights in sailing or in rowing, this costume will serve well. It is as simple as it is smart and it is perfectly adapted to its use. As it is shown here, the skirt is made of blue crepe linen and the blouse is made of white handkerchief linen smocked with blue. It makes a very dainty effect and gives an attractive costume, but there are numberless materials that are being quite correct. The tub silks are being much used for blouses, either crepe de chine or striped tub silk could be used for the blouse over a linen or cotton gingham or a pique skirt. Glove silk is liked by some girls and could be used. Both the linen and cotton fabrics are offered in a variety of weaves and weights so that almost every need can be supplied. The skirt may be made in two or in three pieces, with or without the pockets that are arranged over the fronts and belt.

"I'll recommend the place any time," said Warren, laughing good naturedly. "And I hope you'll invite us again very soon, Miss Mathews. I don't know when I've enjoyed a meal so much."

Washington Park, Ill.—"I am the mother of four children and have suffered with female trouble, backache, nervous spells and the blues. I have had quite a bit of trouble and worry but it does not affect my youthful looks. My friends say 'Why do you look so young and well?' I owe it all to the Lydia E. Pinkham remedies." —Mrs. ROBT. AMUSEMENTS

To-day's attraction at the Victoria is entitled "The Tarantula," featuring Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno. The attraction at the Victoria Motion Picture World to-day is "The Iron Claw," featuring William H. Thompson.

"The Eye of the Night" Triangle play, which is being shown at the Colonial theater to-day and to-morrow, is a European war picture. The action of which takes place on the north coast of England. It tells the story of a young man who was in support of Billie Burke in "Fanny Hill" and other Triangle plays will be shown in the leading role as an old lighthouse keeper in this simple story of a young girl's misadventure. The plot has to do with love, romance, hatred and revenge in which the deadly tarantula is used in bringing about the death of the man who betrayed her. To-day also the concluding chapter of "The Iron Claw" will be shown at the Victoria. This is the part that reveals the identity of the "laughing mask." The identity of Holbrook Blinn in "The Weakness of Man."

Charlie Chaplin will be at the Regent to-day and to-morrow in the first and second presentations of his latest comedy, "The Tramp." Mr. Chaplin is rather well known that Mr. Regent. This is the young person of the most extreme type of "laughing mask." One A. M. leads one to the belief that the movie life of Mr. Chaplin has observed somebody who drank. In addition to Chaplin the eighth of "Gloria's Romance" (the day when the picture featuring Billie Burke, will be shown. Gloria's scream just as she faints upon the stage is a scene of the Richard Frenau, who, hence, aroused the household. Next morning Mrs. Wigginton, who was arrested in the Chelsea cottage, after a battle with a policeman.

DELIGHTFUL SUMMER HOME OF KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN. One of the many happy occasions of the celebrated Dorcas Fair gives the following charming description of Mrs. Kate Douglas Wiggin's summer home, Quillcoote, where the fair is held.

"If you enter the hospitable looking home by the side door you are at once in Quillcoote's seven-doored sitting room where its great fireplace with the tea kettle in readiness for use on one side and the spinning wheel with its suggestion of quiet industry at the other are the first things that greet the eye. A burning ball of the least antenae of a burning ball when the first sharp frosts of Fall have turned the vista of green fields seen through the doorway to one of brown stubble. On the piazza in front of the reading table are masses of glowing red field lilies.

"Passing from the sitting room into the adjoining blue parlor where all the furnishings are in blue and white, the flower decorations consist of Easter lilies and blue larkspur, while old rose gladioli brighten the hall effectively. A centerpiece of delicate rosebuds or French clover decks the table in the dining room which is set with rare old china and covers marked with place cards for the Governor of Maine, Mayor of Portland, the president of Bowdoin College, which gave Mrs. Wiggin an honorary degree of master of arts, and the president of the Dorcas Society. This is Mr. Wiggin's little joke, as nearly everybody knows, but occasionally someone takes it seriously, and a visitor who at one time exclaimed, 'Why are they not going to have for supper' made the simple hoax seem so real for a moment that Mrs. Wiggin claims she was paralyzed with fear at the recollection of how little the family larder contained as the result of the extensive preparations which it had been necessary to make for the fair.

"In Mrs. Wiggin's study, which is just beyond the dining room (for the Lady of the Twinkle and the Tea classes cookery among the high arts and locates her sanctum accordingly), the flower decorations are of golden rod, which blends most harmoniously with the green of the furnishings. Golden glow peeps in at the open windows above the fireplace. Here may be seen the manuscript of the author's new book, "The Romance of a Christmas Card," which is to be issued next October.

"You are quite likely to encounter Mrs. Wiggin somewhere in the delightful restful rooms, but she is more likely to be found in the woodshed busily autographing her books for a long line of waiting patrons."

Husband Accused by Wife of Trying to Shoot Her

Atlantic City, Aug. 11.—Attempting to shoot and kill his wife on the eve of the signing of papers providing for their separation is charged against E. G. Wigginton, a Philadelphia manufacturer, who was arrested in the Chelsea cottage, after a battle with a policeman.

Mrs. Wigginton, said to be worth $200,000 in her own right, swore out a warrant for her husband's arrest after he had been taken to police headquarters. In a statement made to Magistrate Sontheimer, who issued the warrant, Mrs. Wigginton, who has been a prominent figure in Chelsea society since she purchased a handsome home at Atlantic and Annapolis avenues several months ago, declared she had been living in constant fear for her life for three weeks. It is admitted that Wigginton had been drinking heavily, through grief, his friends assert, over the impending separation.

According to Mrs. Wigginton's statement, her husband became so threatening last night that she summoned Frank Crosby, a policeman, to the Chelsea cottage at midnight. Crosby stationed himself behind portieres in the reception room. It is charged that shortly before daybreak Wigginton drove his wife from her room to the first floor of the cottage and was aiming a rifle at her head when the policeman disarmed him after a fight which lasted ten minutes.
