

WOMEN'S INTERESTS

"THEIR MARRIED LIFE"

Copyright by International News Service

"Well, what do you know about that?" said Warren as they left the station: "that man in there gave me too much change."

Helen looked at him inquiringly. "He did? Well, don't you think you ought to go back with it?"

"Go back with it; what do you mean?"

"Well, it certainly doesn't belong to you."

"Sure it does; it was given to me."

"Wouldn't you think it wrong if anyone kept too much change if you had happened to be the one to suffer?"

"No; it would serve me right for being careless."

"Of course you say that now; but if it really happened to you, the shoe would be on the other foot."

They walked along a few minutes in silence. Helen was thinking of the incident. Warren was apt to be more careless about small things than she was. Helen believed that it paid to be honest about the smallest things. Her silence finally annoyed Warren, who spoke again.

"Don't you think it's best to have a big corporation suffer the loss of a bit of change than it is for me to lose out on it?" he asked.

"Certainly I don't. Besides, it's not the corporation that loses. That poor man who was careless in making change will probably have to make it good."

"Oh, nonsense, you always make a thing worse than it is. That small amount will never be noticed."

"All the more reason then why you ought to return it."

Helen was determined not to lose her point, and she persisted in upholding her end of the argument. Warren always held out against her in things of this kind. She remembered the day she had argued with him about giving charity to needy people. Nine-tenths of the men were the same. They all believed that in cheating a corporation they were somehow avenging themselves on an unjust world.

"Seriously, Warren," Helen said, after a minute or two of thought, "don't you think at all about the principle of the thing? Remember, it's not the single incident that is so important in itself, it's the thing that stands for. Why you have simply stooped to petty stealing, and if you think it over you can't help but agree with me."

"Do you mean to say that I'm a thief?"

Helen pressed the point. "It amounts to that. You were given something by mistake that doesn't belong to you but to someone else, and you are keeping it under false pretenses."

"I suppose you would call it exactly the same thing, if I should break into a bank and steal fifty thousand dollars."

"It's the same principle."

"That's the craziest thing you've said yet. Now I know you're dead wrong."

Helen shook her head, but said nothing more. Warren was either determined not to give in, and she was as equally determined, or else he was ashamed to confess that he was wrong. Helen felt that she wouldn't mind so much if he would confess himself wrong in the principle, then the same thing would not occur again. Warren was speaking again, and she turned her head to hear what he was saying.

"I suppose you would be perfectly willing to have me make a fool of myself and go back with a few nickels like a schoolboy and say: 'You gave me the wrong change.'"

"Warren, what is the use of arguing in a circle about it. If you think you are right, nothing I can say will make you change your mind, so why talk about it any longer?"

"Hungry?" Warren said gruffly, as they passed the little restaurant near their apartment.

"No, not a bit; that salad down at Bobbie's was too filling. You don't mean to tell me that?"

"Not so very," Warren returned. "I have a hard day to-morrow. I hope it doesn't rain."

Helen was sitting before her dressing table fifteen minutes later, leisurely brushing her hair, when Warren called to her from the livingroom.

"Say, Helen, do you know where my snake ring is? See if it's anywhere around, will you?"

"You had it on this morning at breakfast," Helen called back.

"Are you sure?"

"Positive. I remember it when I poured the second cup of coffee for you. Have you lost it?"

"Oh, I guess I mislaid it, but I don't like to think of it lying down in the office all night."

The Ring Is Lost

Warren's snake ring was one of the few things that he was fond of. It was a queer antique thing, very heavy and unusually handsome. It was the only piece of jewelry that Warren wore, but he was very fond of it, and Helen knew he wouldn't lose it for worlds.

"You didn't leave it in the bathroom, did you?" she said getting up and going into the livingroom. "Shall I look?"

"No. I seem to remember leaving it down at the office this afternoon when I washed my hands. I hate to go down there to-night, and yet if I thought it worth while I would. I certainly wouldn't lose the thing."

"I wouldn't go down to-night if I were you," Helen said lightly. "It will probably be there when you get down in the morning."

"Well," Warren vouchsafed, "it would be funny now, if it should be gone, coming right on top of the change I kept."

"It would be funny," Helen answered, looking him steadily in the eye. "I hope you find it, dear, but you know that old saying about a fair exchange is no robbery."

"Nonsense," said Warren turning away angrily, and Helen wondered just how deeply the significance struck him.

(Watch for the next instalment in this very human series.)

nothing more. Warren was either determined not to give in, and she was as equally determined, or else he was ashamed to confess that he was wrong. Helen felt that she wouldn't mind so much if he would confess himself wrong in the principle, then the same thing would not occur again. Warren was speaking again, and she turned her head to hear what he was saying.

"I suppose you would be perfectly willing to have me make a fool of myself and go back with a few nickels like a schoolboy and say: 'You gave me the wrong change.'"

"Warren, what is the use of arguing in a circle about it. If you think you are right, nothing I can say will make you change your mind, so why talk about it any longer?"

"Hungry?" Warren said gruffly, as they passed the little restaurant near their apartment.

"No, not a bit; that salad down at Bobbie's was too filling. You don't mean to tell me that?"

"Not so very," Warren returned. "I have a hard day to-morrow. I hope it doesn't rain."

Helen was sitting before her dressing table fifteen minutes later, leisurely brushing her hair, when Warren called to her from the livingroom.

"Say, Helen, do you know where my snake ring is? See if it's anywhere around, will you?"

"You had it on this morning at breakfast," Helen called back.

"Are you sure?"

"Positive. I remember it when I poured the second cup of coffee for you. Have you lost it?"

"Oh, I guess I mislaid it, but I don't like to think of it lying down in the office all night."

The Ring Is Lost

Warren's snake ring was one of the few things that he was fond of. It was a queer antique thing, very heavy and unusually handsome. It was the only piece of jewelry that Warren wore, but he was very fond of it, and Helen knew he wouldn't lose it for worlds.

"You didn't leave it in the bathroom, did you?" she said getting up and going into the livingroom. "Shall I look?"

"No. I seem to remember leaving it down at the office this afternoon when I washed my hands. I hate to go down there to-night, and yet if I thought it worth while I would. I certainly wouldn't lose the thing."

"I wouldn't go down to-night if I were you," Helen said lightly. "It will probably be there when you get down in the morning."

"Well," Warren vouchsafed, "it would be funny now, if it should be gone, coming right on top of the change I kept."

"It would be funny," Helen answered, looking him steadily in the eye. "I hope you find it, dear, but you know that old saying about a fair exchange is no robbery."

"Nonsense," said Warren turning away angrily, and Helen wondered just how deeply the significance struck him.

(Watch for the next instalment in this very human series.)

The August Sale Ends With August

That gives you just THREE DAYS MORE in which to take advantage of the SPECIAL SALE PRICES — and PRICES which for a long time to come you will not be able to duplicate.

The assortments are good — in many cases the savings are greater than the first days of the sale on account of clearance sale prices made on pieces that we have a limited quantity. The large volume of business given us during the sale has far exceeded our expectations. A tribute to your confidence in our store—and the honesty of its sales.

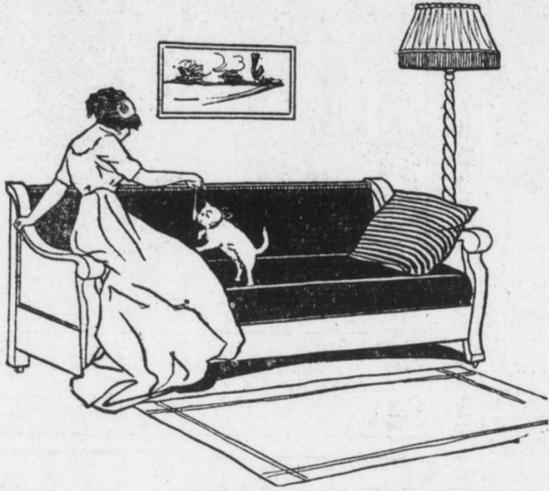

August Sale Furniture

offer savings that have caused many young people to select their furniture now for delivery later on. Credit terms arranged to suit your convenience.

KITCHEN CABINET Sale Price $21.50

Equipped with every device for labor saving, including a sliding, nickel top, sifter flour bin and nickel bread box, white enamel interior.

A Handsome Davenport---Something Needed in Every Home

You Can Thank Our August Sale For These Values

- Davenport Bed—full length, solid oak frame, upholstered with imitation leather; easily converted into a bed. $21.50
Davenport Bed—short length, but when it is converted into a bed it is roomy enough for two to sleep comfortably; frame is oak and well made. $29.50
Davenport Suite—consisting of davenport, which can be converted into a bed; chair and rocker to match, solid oak frame, designed on neat and plain lines. $52.00
Davenport Livingroom Suite—dull mahogany finish, upholstered with a beautiful pattern of tapestry. The davenport can be purchased separately; three pieces. $95.00

Roomy Moth Proof Cedar Chests at Sale Prices

We have lots of CEDAR CHESTS, but this one is made of our special order. It is designed on Colonial lines with massive posts, and is constructed of best quality of Tennessee cedar. The chest is extra large size, measuring forty-eight inches. You will be surprised how much storage capacity there is. It has a moulded frame around the top, so it will not warp. An excellent $19.00 value. $16.50

Cedar Chest—designed on plain lines. It is made of Tennessee red cedar, the same wood that is used in the more expensive ones. The top measures 40 inches; Sale Price $8.50

BURNS & CO.

28-30-32 S. Second Street

EXTRA STRONG TABOURETTE 98c

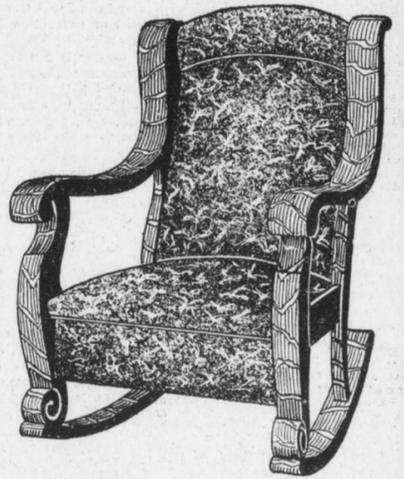

The season will soon be here for putting the plans in the house, so this TABOURETTE value should be interesting. It is finished in wood and made of solid oak, so it will support the heaviest plant.

HIGH BACK ROCKER

Sale Price

$10.95

This ROCKER is made with massive wood frames, finished dull mahogany. Soft springs in the seat add to the comfort of the chair. It is upholstered with a good quality of black, imitation leather that will give years of service. The rockers are made extra wide and the chair is well balanced, so it rocks without any effort, and being constructed with an extra high back, it is one of the most comfortable rockers you ever sat in. In addition, it is a very ornamental chair.

The Best Value of the Sale

William & Mary Dining Room Suite, 3 Pieces.. $75

This is really one of the greatest features of the AUGUST FURNITURE SALE. The pieces are made of solid oak, finished in Jacobean color, designed on the new and beautiful William & Mary style with its characteristic, round turnings. We cannot attempt to describe this suite, but prefer you to see it.

The Buffet is a massive one, with a base that measures 54 inches. The china closet matches it, with the William and Mary turnings. The table has five legs, and can be extended to six feet.

We also have chairs to match, at interesting sale prices.

CUTICURA SOAP advertisement featuring an illustration of a woman's face and text describing its benefits for skin.

NUXATED IRON advertisement with a price tag of $1.00 and text describing its health benefits.

Vacation Trips advertisement listing destinations like Lexington and Savannah-Jacksonville.

SAVOY advertisement for a beach resort with amenities like a swimming pool and tennis courts.

RUFFLES AND LACE ON DAINTY FROCK advertisement featuring an illustration of a young girl in a dress.

BARN AND CROPS BURNED advertisement reporting on a fire in Hershey, Pa.

Charged Detectives Milked Aged Millionaire of Money

Chicago, Ill., Aug. 28.—Sixty letters found in the receivers' search of the old Morrison home will be introduced in the bankruptcy proceedings against Edward M. Morrison, the eccentric and aged millionaire whose case is being heard before Judge Landis in the Federal court, when the hearing is resumed next week.

PRIZE-WINNING WOLFHOOND

Waynesboro, Pa., Aug. 28.—A Russian wolfhound belonging to Mrs. O. M. Peters, of Waynesboro, which was on exhibition at the Butler fair last week, took all of the available prizes at the dog show in its class, six in number. The dog's name is Ivanova F. K. C.

CLAIM VICTORY IN WEST FOR HUGHES

Managers Say Candidate Has Gained Many Votes; Taking Rest. Special to the Telegraph. Estes Park, Col., Aug. 28.—Charles E. Hughes arrived at the Hotel Stanley, Estes Park, at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, determined to get a complete rest and put politics aside for the next three days.

ACIDS IN THE SYSTEM

Acids accumulating in the system in excess, poison the blood and cause a variety of diseases, affecting the skin and other mucous surfaces, the heart and arteries, brain and general nervous system, joints and muscles.

CLAIM VICTORY IN WEST FOR HUGHES

Managers Say Candidate Has Gained Many Votes; Taking Rest. Special to the Telegraph. Estes Park, Col., Aug. 28.—Charles E. Hughes arrived at the Hotel Stanley, Estes Park, at 11 o'clock yesterday morning, determined to get a complete rest and put politics aside for the next three days.

ACIDS IN THE SYSTEM

Acids accumulating in the system in excess, poison the blood and cause a variety of diseases, affecting the skin and other mucous surfaces, the heart and arteries, brain and general nervous system, joints and muscles.