

ALIENS CAUSE MUCH TROUBLE

Wide Difference of Opinion in England Over Whether They Must Enlist

London (correspondence of the Associated Press). Wide difference of opinion has arisen and the ground prepared for a controversy among the political leaders by the government's decision that the subjects of its allies in the war residing in England shall either enlist in the British army or be deported.

Particular objection to the decision has been engendered in so far as it may affect Russian subjects here who may be political refugees, a large element of the more liberal thinkers in public life priding themselves in the traditional asylum offered by England in this respect. Herbert Samuel, secretary of the home office, stated in the house of commons that the plan to deport those failing to enlist would not be enforced in the case of Russian subject if a tribunal decided that they are political refugees.

The suggestion has been made that instead of sending back to their own country Russian Jews who have left Russia for Russian liberation to everybody, though they are not exactly political refugees, they should be sent to America or deported to some other neutral country of their choice.

The desire to avoid offending Russian susceptibilities on the subject is general, for which reason the question is regarded as one of unusual delicacy. One group holds that the sending back of Russian Jews to their own country would gratify no important Russian sentiment and might effect the reverse result. The true inwardness of the situation, according to the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, is that Englishmen taken into the army under conscription and the immunity of Russian Jews and regard them as "job stealers."

The correspondent gives the following letter on the subject received by him from a Russian correspondent:

"This step will have a most unfortunate effect upon Russian opinion, which is the chief support in Russia of Anglo-Russian friendship. The step which builds all its hopes for Russia's future upon the propagation of the British spirit of freedom and individual liberty. Russian liberals will regard the deportation threat with particular dismay as being unexpected and staggering concession to the long-cherished but always hitherto baffled desire of the Russian bureaucracy to secure the extradition of Russian political refugees.

"England is the great country of Europe that has always hitherto protected political refugees, and as such it has quite a unique standing in the eyes of Russian reformers of all shades. It would be quite impossible for an Englishman to realize the feeling of veneration with which England is regarded because of this right of asylum. It was here in London that Alexander Herzen, father of Russian Liberalism, was a refugee, and issued his paper Kolokol (The Bell) that eventually brought about the emancipation of the serfs. Here in later times have found refuge Tchaikovsky, Prince Kuropatkin and so many others of our great reformers.

"Living in London at this moment are refugee members of the first duma, and quite a host of revolutionaries who escaped after 1905. Russia does not want these men as soldiers. If they were sent back to Russia most of them would be put into the army—many of them would have to face the worst snail. But the principal evil would be that the Russian idealization of this country would be shattered, and such a disillusionment of Britain's chief political friends in Russia might well prove disastrous to the close cooperation of the two countries in the future.

"It is unpalatable, but it is true, that among the conservatives and reactionary elements in Russia, any attitude would be gratified by this new British departure, there is a frankly anti-British section, and their spokesmen in the duma have not hesitated to declare that Russia's future after the war lies not with Great Britain, but with Germany. One curious fact in Russia may be permitted to point out as far as is known, Germany has not yet repatriated to Austria a single Czech agitator who took refuge in Germany."

Use of Coffee in Vienna Has Been Restricted

Vienna, Sept. 18. — (Correspondence of The Associated Press). The long-dreaded restriction in the use of coffee—which is to Vienna what beer is to Munich—has come at last, bringing with it coffee cards entitling each person over four years of age to a pound of coffee a week and confiscation of all the coffee now on hand to prevent hoarding.

The government order announcing the step contained one saving clause, however. It exempts from restriction the supplies needed by restaurants and coffee houses, which means that Vienna will still be able to pursue its favorite pastime of sipping coffee "black" or "brown" on the sidewalks in front of the innumerable resorts that line every boulevard and street.

Each coffee store, wholesale and retail, has been required to notify the authorities of its exact supply of coffee over 100 kilograms (220 lbs.). The excess in each case is then subject to the control of a "Coffee Central," which in future will regulate the disposal of the product to the public, and have charge of all coffee that in future comes into the country.

The coffee cards will be issued by districts and a card in one district cannot be used in another. They are non-transferable, so that the rare person who does not use coffee cannot pass his or her card to a friend.

PATENT LEATHER HATS

Vienna, Sept. 18. — Rainy weather that has prevailed for weeks without a let-up has been responsible for the introduction of patent-leather hats which are now in great vogue among the women of Vienna. In addition to the genuine there are numerous imitation patent-leathers which are not affected by dampness. The patent-leather style has also extended to include belts, cuffs, collars and other parts of the costume.

Horse Shakes Boy Who Teased Him

Chester, Pa. — A horse with a grip like a vise, capable of shaking a youngster with a hundred-fold as much energy as possessed by the most experienced "school marm," was discovered in Chester, by Caspar, the 6-year-old son of John Bessinger, a baker, when the lad insisted on teasing a horse owned by John Jones, a paperhanger of this city.

The horse was standing in the rear of Bessinger's automobile, in the back seat of which was young Caspar, in a playful mood. With a rigid index finger, Caspar found much enjoyment in poking Dobbin on the nose. The horse patiently endured this treatment for a few minutes, and then suddenly reached over the end of the machine, when Caspar's back was turned, seized the back of his clothing, lifted him clear of the car, vigorously shook the lad a few times and then dropped him in the mud. The yell of the six-year-old lad could not have been outdone. His father, mother and nearly two score neighbors responded to the alarm. The lad's clothing was torn and his back slightly marked by the horse's teeth. He was taken to a drug store, where it was found he was but little injured.

MEANINGS

By Jane McLean September is a month to you, a month and nothing more. Another flock of joyous hours to count off by the score. To me it is a month of dreams, when an autumn shy and sweet,

With wild young arms flung to the sky, sweeps down the rain wet street. To you it means the shortened days, the dark that comes too soon. But I may read the night's calm eyes and feel my soul in tune. To you it means the sharper tang that thrills the wind with wine. But I may walk the country lane, his cold hand clasped in mine.

To you it means that Fall has come, the world is growing gray; To me it means a gypsy heart, an open road to stray.

TASKS AND TREASURES: A TALK TO MOTHERS

The child who is not allowed to test its own powers never can realize the extent of those powers; if it is discouraged in its efforts to put itself in close and varied relation with life, it ceases by and by to care about such relationship. The child who is not allowed to follow, for instance, a child's normal desire to garden or to cook, becomes the grown person who cares nothing about such things or positively dislikes them. By depriving children of the tasks they themselves desire you have left them an empty treasure house in later years. There are some natures strong enough, perhaps, to keep the desire past all discouragements, but usually, when we have repeatedly denied a child the task he would choose and love, we have robbed him of a great deal. And when we discourage him, and say, for instance, "You see, you only make a failure of it when you try to cook, wait until you are older," we rob him of faith in himself and undermine his courage; we literally discourage him. When he comes in later years to life's more difficult tasks, he will the more readily doubt his ability to perform them successfully, and doubt of his own ability will make him timid and will discourage him; and the timid and the discouraged stand only a much weakened chance of success and happiness in life.—Laura Spencer Porter, in the October Mother's Magazine.

"But, Aren't They Very Expensive?"

We often smile at this question when some of our lady patrons have heard the

that very latest scientific type of phonograph — that draws the hidden beauties from your records.

Its new standards of "beauty in phonographic form," its unique ability to develop beautiful tones heretofore inaudible in records — and to make each record sound new — all naturally create the "expensive impression."

As a fact, Vocalions are no more expensive than other phonographs.

People are frankly surprised at the convenience of the terms by which any model on the Vocalion can be obtained. They often do not know, even, that exchange arrangements for their own machines are quite easily possible.
