RED BARN GREAT STATE FEATURE

Interesting Comment Upon the Color of the Pennsylvanians' Barns

The great red barns of Pennsylvania are a Pennsylvania Dutch institution according to L. W. Lighty, farm adviser of the State Department of Agriculture. The red barns on many farms have attracted the attention of visitors for years, and recently from Virginia came an inquiry asking whether the barns are covered with a lime wash colored red or what preparation. Mr. Lighty says: "The red barn is a Pennsylvania Dutch institution although we have no copyright. The Irish and Scotch-Irish whitewash or yellow wash their barns and they might use a spray pump to do it, but the Pennsylvania Dutchman is as particular about the painting of his barn as you Virginia folks are about ornamenting your drawing room. The red barns are not washed but painted with the best linseed oil and the best red paint as Spanish or English red mixed with some red lead. You could much easier find hen's teeth than find a Pennsylvania Dutchman spray red wash on his fine barn."

"To spray wash a barn the best thing I know of use is the cold water paint on the market that can be had through the regular channels of the trade. Regular lime whitewash may be colored light red by the addition of English red and strained so it will work through a spray pump. But it cannot be compared to the paint on the red barns of Pennsylvania."

250 BEAR KILLED IN KEYSTONE STATE

Dr. Kalbfus Says That There Were More Killed Here Than in Some Western States

Estimates that probably 250 bear will be killed in Pennsylvania in the season which ends to-morrow were made at the office of the State Game Commission to-day. This number is more than are ordinarily killed in a year in some of the western states. It is not believed that the kill of deer will run as high this year as last because of the lack of snow, which prevented tracking of the animals. The deer season ends to-morrow. The 6,000 quail imported from Mexico have been placed in charge of game wardens and will be housed during the winter. They are practically
