"JOAN OF ARC" AS CHURCH BENEFIT

Gaul's Beautiful Oratorio Presented by Large Chorus Tomorrow Evening in Tech

JOHN W. PHILLIPS

Gaul's beautiful oratorio, "Joan of Arc," will be presented in the Technical High School Auditorium tomorrow evening by a chorus of nearly a hundred voices, under the direction of John W. Phillips. The soloists will be Miss Mary Buttorf, soprano; John D. Fisher, tenor, and Ross Harman, basso, and the Updegrave Orchestra will play.

This oratorio centers about the beautiful and true history of "The Maid of Orleans," beginning with a May festival at Boremy, France, where she was born. In the midst of the flowers and song, Joan appears, saddened by the fate of her beloved country and hearing "The Voices" which bid her give her very life for its help. Finally securing the necessary aid, Joan assumes man's garb, a suit of armor, sword, banner and steed and soon after entering Orleans with her army, the siege is lifted and there is much rejoicing among the French. Other victories follow before the hour of reversal, when Joan is captured and led to execution at Rouens.

The scenes of the four historical May's have been retained in the oratorio—the May of Victory; the May of Victory; the May of Fall and the May of Sacrifice.

The music is most beautiful and the chorus does its part in just as finished style as the soloists. A large audience should greet these singers. The event is for the benefit of the Standard Bearers of the Grace Methodist Church, one of the missionary societies of the church.

Cold Storage Law Amendments Ready

The dairy and food commissioner's cold storage law amendments which will be introduced into the Senate tonight by Senator F. W. Snyder, of Blair, will contain a provision that the owner of foods stored beyond the legal limit in a cold storage warehouse shall be held liable to prosecution and not the warehouseman.

The amendments are designed to clarify the law and to make some provisions which will enable it to be more easily administered after the experience of a couple of years. The clause relative to "outlawed" food would permit the state to sue a man who allowed foodstuffs to spoil or to remain in storage beyond the legal limit instead of placing them on sale. There will also be given authority for the dairy and food commissioner to render unit for use foods stored beyond the legal limit, as can now be done with rotten eggs.

The administration will likely oppose the Jones cold storage bill which provides for season to season storage.

DO MY SINFUL FOLLIES PAY? IS A QUESTION FOR HUSBANDS

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox Copyright, 1916, Star Company.

This is a question I would like every man who reads these lines to ask himself, if, in his inmost conscience, he finds that the words I am about to write apply to him.

A great tragedy occurred in court circles: a princess of royal blood killed the paramour of her husband. The wife was only a score of years old, and she had been married to the man of her choice only two years.

She was young, beautiful and loving; she had signed away her right to the throne in order to marry the man she loved. She was an expectant mother. Yet all these proofs of her devotion and sincerity did not awaken in her husband's heart a sufficiently high sense of manly honor and pride to keep him from allowing a physical passion for another woman to dominate him.

And to make the insult to his young wife still more pronounced, he brought the actress who had won his heart to his home—under the same roof with his wife.

The wife learned of the intrigue, and in a moment of terrible anger—that anger which is insanity—killed her rival. Did the giving victory to a physical infatuation at the sacrifice of all noble ideals pay the husband?

Hundreds of men who read these words are tempted from within and from without to yield to fascinations similar to that which placed a Prince before the world in the role of the most contemptible man living.

Men by nature, habit and custom of society are subjected to such temptations and have always held to the belief that they were less reprehensible when they yielded than a woman under similar conditions.

One question for every married man to ask himself is, Does it pay? Does it pay to follow every impulse of the desire and appetite and passions, and to weaken the will power and vitiate the moral fibre by self-indulgence?

Does it pay to deceive a woman who loves and trusts you, or to defy her and argue that your nature is one requiring more license and indulgence than hers?

Would it not eventually bring you more happiness were you to control those lawless impulses by the exercise of your higher nature, and to live up to the ideal of the woman who loves you? It will become easier each time you resist, just as it will become more and more difficult each time you yield.

Think it over, and ask yourself which pays best, as you recall the tragedies occurring daily in the world through this self-indulgence of human beings. Then there is the gratification and pleasure you find in the drink habit.

Does it pay? You gain a half hour, or perhaps two or three hours, of mirth and freedom from care and then you go home to pain, grief or disgust—some loving woman—mother, wife or daughter, perhaps all three.

You do this only once in a while, perhaps, and say that a woman should be liberal-minded enough not to make a scene over such an occurrence. I agree with you that the wise woman treats a man who is, as a rule, sober and kind, with great care when he first yields to the weakness of drink.

She should think of him as something to pity and to help until he is sober and able to reason about his conduct. Then she should not hesitate to make him realize, as quietly and kindly as possible, how he has fallen in her estimation, and how he has hurt her pride and respect. Men are in the habit of making a jest of such lapses, and they think a woman hard-hearted and narrow-minded who regards them as tragedies. But while a tender and loving woman will treat a drunken man with pity and consideration, she cannot feel the same admiration and respect, and pride which are elements in every great love.

Aside from hurting her feelings and wounding her heart, the husband or father who frequently comes home intoxicated digs a ditch at the foundation on which his happiness is laid—the solid respect and admiring love of the woman of his household.

Does it pay? Then there is the delight men find in the gaming table. I believe cards have helped many a brazenfaced man to keep his mind from business and his nervous system from collapse. I believe clubs are good institutions.

But does it pay to make the home secondary to the club, and to become so debauched with the gaming mania that you sit at the table night after night until dawn and rush through your business in order to get back to the club?

Does it pay to let the habit grow upon you until you find any other amusement a bore and an evening at home so perceptible a tax upon you that it destroys its pleasure for your family?

Aside from the fact that you are destroying your better nature, your real immortal qualities, by self-indulgence in all or any of these habits herein enumerated, does the pleasure you get out of them pay you for all they cost yourself and others dear to you?

Why Not Right About Face and Start New Line of Conduct? If not, why not right-about-face and start over in a new line of conduct? You need not be a "goody-goody" man; you need not shut yourself from all worldly pleasures or give up everything but duty.

But suppose you try how it seems to be faithful to your marriage vows, to avoid crossing the line of sober self-control and to leave the club and the card table by mid-night and to pass three or four evenings with your family each week. Suppose you try this for one year and see whether it does not pay better dividends in the long run than the other course.

Look at the matter of these indulgences as an investment—just as you look over your financial matters to see what has best paid you during the year. And then confess to yourself whether the gain in "pleasure" may not be counter-balanced by the continual assessments of shame, fear, deception, reproach and loss of self-respect, not to mention taxes of physical pain and discomfort.

KEMPER GETS HIS OLD PLACE AGAIN

Lieutenant Colonel of Eighth Will Be N. G. P. Inspector-Instructor

KEMPER—5 Captain James B. Kemper, lieutenant colonel of the Eighth Infantry, will return to his status as the regular army inspector-instructor attached to National Guard headquarters when mustered out. Captain Kemper was at the Capitol to-day arranging to immediately take up his work.

Colonel Preston, the mustering-out officer of the Eighth, to-day complimented the Eighth regimental headquarters and the local companies upon the condition of papers, to which much attention was given by the officers. Their condition facilitates the muster out.

The appeal of H. Homer Matter from the condemnation of his property, The Matterhorn, for Capitol Park extension, will be heard in the Supreme Court, in Philadelphia, to-day.

Arrangements are being made by claimants in the Newmans town Electric Light and Power Company for an inspection of the plant of the company, which was recently criticised in hearings at the Public Service Commission.

The Meade Memorial Statue Commission will meet here to-morrow to take up matters pertaining to the location of the statue at Washington.

Prof. J. G. Sanders, the State Zoologist, and Dr. H. A. Surface, who was deposed from the place, are to be speakers at the annual convention of the State Bee Keepers' Association in this city this week. Both are authorities on bee diseases and the proposed inspection of apiaries by the State, which Dr. Surface has advocated, will be the big theme of discussion.

John P. Dohoney, chief of the bureau of accidents of the Public Service Commission, was to-day detailed to go to Bristol to make an investigation into the cause of yesterday's accident.

The Berwick Motor Club to-day filed complaint against grade crossings in Columbia county maintained by the North Branch Transit Company and the Lackawanna railroad.

Representative H. P. Shunk, of Harborside, Erie county, to-day filed complaint with the Public Service Commission against the service of the Buffalo and Lake Erie Traction company, attacking the cars, their operation, fares and roadbed. The Scranton Railway Company filed complaint that W. H. Owens was not operating a jitney in accordance with the provisions of a certificate issued to him by the commission.
