This tale follows the development of a young girl in spite of narrow environments and a mystery in her family's past which makes her shunned on all sides. A whole, some, winsome person is Lyddy, who wins the great rewards because of the soundness of her thinking about life, her ambition and her natural charm.

BERLIN DEFENDS ALLEGED PLOT

Failed to keep the United States neutrality. These reports were based on the following facts: Points to U. S. Course "After the decision had been taken to begin unrestricted submarine warfare on February 1, we had to reckon, in view of the previous attitude of the American government with the possibility of conflict with the United States. That this calculation was right is proved by the fact that the American government severed diplomatic relations with Germany soon after the proclamation of a barred zone and asked other neutrals to follow her example.

Admits Intrigue "The German minister at Mexico, therefore, was instructed in the middle of January that in the event of the United States declaring war he should offer to the Mexican government an alliance and arrange further details. These instructions by the way, expressly directed the minister to make no advances to the Mexican government unless he knew for a certainty that America was going to declare war.

"How the American government received information of the instructions by a secret way to Mexico is not known. It appears, however, that the treachery—and it only must have been treachery—was committed on German territory.

PAINTING FROM MEMORY SHOWS HOW CAMP CURTIN PUMP LOOKED

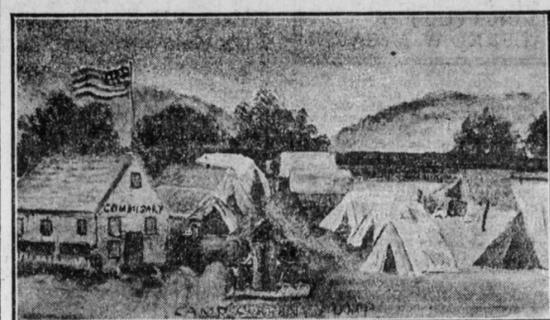

Diagram of section of old Camp Curtin painted from memory as described by J. R. Miller, 1316 North Sixth street. The pump was one of the camp's historic points.

By J. R. Miller This scene represents the old Camp Curtin pump that once stood at the corner of Maclay street and ridge road about forty feet from the curbline of these streets, at the present time, looking toward the Susquehanna river. Here could at all times be seen a group of soldiers who had gathered there, some with buckets and others with canteens, waiting to have them filled with pure and sparkling water from a well 100 feet deep. It furnished water for over 300,000 boys in blue and their many friends who visited them before their departure for the far off sunny South. I have witnessed some sad scenes enacted upon this now sacred and historic ground. I have seen the leave takings between husband and wife, fathers and sons, parents and children, lovers and sweethearts, and so many brave men the last farewell to the loved ones at home. Many thousands had filled their canteens for the last time from that historic old pump. You could at all times see a crowd of soldiers gathered there, while a young and stalwart boy in blue pumped with a will.

SCENE FROM "WAR BRIDES" AT COLONIAL NEXT WEEK Shall love be sacrificed upon the altar of imperial glory for power? This is the question pointedly asked in the photo-drama, "War Brides," which Herbert Brenon is presenting at the Colonial Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. Although it is impossible to escape this question in witnessing the play, no attempt is made to teach or preach. As in his previous successes, "A Daughter of the Gods," "The Southerner" and a number of other noted film successes, Mr. Brenon simply tells the story and lets the moral, if there be one, take care of itself. But in "War Brides" the constant clash between the individual and the state makes the problem obvious. The individual in the play is Joan, a young peasant girl, in which role Nastimova will make her first appearance on the moving picture screen. She played the part with great success in vaudeville, but many incidents have been added and elaborated, giving her much wider scope for her unique talents than she has had in any of her stage productions. There will be no advance in prices for the production.
