

HOME-READING COURSE FOR CITIZEN-SOLDIERS

(Issued by the War Department and all rights to reprint reserved)

This course of thirty daily lessons is offered to the men selected for service in the National Army as a practical help in getting started in the right way. It is informal in tone and does not attempt to give binding rules and directions. These are contained in the various manuals and regulations of the United States Army, to which this Course is merely introductory.

over and you will see that they are not strict and exact. They are meant to be strictly obeyed.

My general orders are:

1. To take charge of this post and Government property entrusted to me.
2. To walk my post in a military manner, keeping always on the alert and observing everything that takes place within sight or hearing.
3. To report all violations of orders I am instructed to enforce.
4. To report all calls from posts more distant from the guardhouse than my own.
5. To quit my post only when properly relieved.
6. To receive all orders and pass on to the sentinel who relieves me all orders from the commanding officer, officer of the day, and officers and noncommissioned officers of the guard only.
7. To talk to no one except in line of duty.
8. In case of fire or disorder to give the alarm.
9. To allow no one to commit a nuisance on or near my post.
10. To see that no one is covered by instructions to call the corporal of the guard.
11. To salute all officers, and all colors and standards not covered.
12. To be especially watchful at night, and, during the time for challenging, to challenge all persons on duty, and to allow no one to pass without proper authority.

Even though a sentinel be only a private soldier, he is in a position of authority and honor. He represents the commanding officer. He must be respected and the orders he gives as a sentinel must be strictly obeyed, not only by other soldiers but by officers, whatever their rank. During the night the sentinel will challenge any person or party who comes within his post calling out sharply "Halt. Who is there?" The person challenged, or one of the party if there are several persons, may be permitted to approach for the purpose of giving the countersign or of being recognized. In case of doubt it is a sentinel's duty to prevent anyone from passing him and to call the corporal of the guard. "A sentinel will never allow himself to be surprised, nor permit two parties to advance on him at the same time."

Duties of Orderlies
Members of the guard may be assigned to duty as orderlies to the commanding officer or to other officers. "For these positions the soldiers will be chosen who are most correct in performance of duty and in military bearing, neat in person and clothing, and whose arms and accoutrements are in the best condition." It is decidedly a compliment to any soldier to be designated to serve as an orderly.

An orderly usually accompanies the officer wherever he goes, assists or serves him in accordance with directions, carries messages for him and the like.

Exterior guard duty consists of keeping watch at a distance from the main body of troops. When a camp is within possible striking distance from the enemy, it is necessary to place sentries in positions at points where they may observe an approaching enemy, give the alarm, and if possible check or stop his advance. These parties are known as outposts.

When a large body of troops is on the march, advance, rear, and flank guards keep watch on the surrounding country. In general, their duties are similar to those of outposts.

Scouting
One of the most responsible duties to which a soldier may be assigned is patrolling or scouting. An infantry patrol usually consists of from 3 to 16 men. It is not usually intended that the patrol should fight, since its prime purpose is to obtain and bring back information. However, it may be forced to fight, if discovered, in order to protect the escape of at least one of its members with a report of the information secured.

"Every soldier should be able to find his way in a strange country; should know how to use a compass; should know how to locate the north star; should be able to travel across country, keeping a given direction, both by day and by night, and by observing landmarks he should be able to return to the starting point whether over the same route or by a more circuitous one. This can easily be learned by a little practice. It adds a great deal to the value of a soldier if he knows how to use a map to find his way. If he knows how to make a rough sketch of the country, he has added to his value as a soldier very much indeed." (Manual for Noncommissioned Officers and Privates, p. 161.)

Of course these remarks on guard duty can give you only a general idea of its nature and of your own responsibility. But enough has been said to indicate that any man has much to learn before he can be called a first-class soldier. You will find your months of training slipping by rapidly, especially as you become more and more interested in mastering the varied phases of your new occupation.

Wife of Soukholinoff Bore Sinister Influence on Him All His Life

Petrograd, Sept. 7.—Witnesses at the trial of General Soukholinoff, former war minister, who is accused of high treason, unfolded in part today the story of Madame Soukholinoff, bearing out reports of the influence she established over her husband. She is on trial as an accomplice in the crime of which the general is accused.

Anna Goshkevitch, a former friend of the Soukholinoffs testified that the young wife of the elderly minister of war frequently expended 100,000 rubles a year. When she was abroad her husband had sent her almost his entire salary and for the sake of economy he was forced to eat at the officers' casino. The witness declared that General Soukholinoff and carelessly of military secrets in the presence of visitors an told his wife everything. Secret papers from the war office, she said, often lay about his home where they might easily have been read and copied.

M. Boutovitch, Madame Soukholinoff's first husband, testified that his wife demanded that he obtain a divorce and give her a large sum of money because she desired to marry General Soukholinoff, then governor-general of Kiev. M. Boutovitch said he had a stormy interview with General Soukholinoff, challenged him to a duel, and attempted to strike him. His wife pretended she had taken poison, he testified, and refused to take an antidote until he promised to assume the guilt necessary for her divorce and pay her 4,000 rubles a year. She was 25 years old at that time and General Soukholinoff was 50.
