That is the revised estimate of Major-General George W. Goethals, acting quartermaster-general of the United States Army, as given to the members of the House Military Affairs Committee by the chairman,

Representative S. Hubert Dent, of Alabama. This means that there will be 600,000 more men in training by July 1 than had been anticipated when the estimates for the next fiscal year were sent to Congress four months ago, and that an army of 3,000,000 men is certain this year.

Similar increases are to be made in the other fighting branches of the Government. When the $1,300,000,000 naval appropriation bill was taken up in the House yesterday, the announcement was made that the Naval Committee had been officially requested to increase the size of the Marine Corps from its present strength of 30,000 to 75,000. When war broke out there were but 15,000 men in that corps.

Members of the Naval Affairs Committee reported unanimously in favor of the increase asked by the Government. This increase, it was explained by members of the Naval Committee, means that the War Department has decided to keep a full division of marines, 28,000 men, on the battlefields of France at all times.
