BEIDLEMAN AND SPROUL FAVORED HERE

agricultural districts and, despite the cases and energetic campaigning of the "dry" forces in both city and county, public interest appears to be centered in the war and the Red Cross drive rather than in politics.

Beidleman Strong It goes without saying that Senator Beidleman will beat Scott to a frazzle in his home county. The Senator, who cut his campaign three days short to argue the mine dock-age in the case of the Dauphin county miners before the Dauphin county courts, and who won it for them, is positive that he will not only win at home, but will go to Philadelphia with a majority and carry that city.

"The outlook is entirely satisfactory," he said today. "I feel confident that I will be nominated. I have tried to keep my campaign on the high plane of purely constructive policies and wherever possible have refrained from personalities. I find the people in no mood to be other than extremely serious. They have more to think about just now than any political squabbling. They want to know the character of the candidates, what are their records and what they stand for. I have tried to tell them I have met with wonderful receptions wherever I have gone and feel certain I shall be nominated."

That is also the prediction of Frank A. Smith, former county chairman, who is managing the Beidleman campaign.

Andrew Redmond, chairman of the local Beidleman committee, says he has reports from every district in the county and every one favorable.

Sproul Strong Here "Senator Sproul is also very strong in Dauphin county," said Mr. Smith to-day. "I believe he will carry the county by a big majority."

Senator Sproul's dignified and constructive platform won friends for him here from the very first. His long political experience made him a familiar figure in the city and he numbers his friends by the thousands.

The O'Neil forces were distinctly in the minority to-day and were largely confined to those driven into line for the Highway Commissioner by the attitude of the State Administration. Former employees of the State Highway Department are openly for Sproul.

Anonymous Letter An anonymous circular was scattered about Harrisburg during last night's political campaign. It contained a rabid assault about one Republican and two Democratic candidates on account of their religious faith. In view of the fact that thousands of Catholics are serving in the various branches of the national forces and are participating in the activities for the support of the Government, the intimation that they are a menace to "American institutions" is regarded as a contemptible and distasteful insult in the dark.
