

ALL HARRISBURG OBSERVES VICTORY

that something must be doing, and hustled to the telephone. But that did little good. Apparently everybody in Harrisburg thought of the telephone at the same time. It was worse than a fire. The night force of exchange girls was simply swamped. The switchboards were a blaze of light and some of the girls became hysterical under the strain of trying to keep up the service. They found it impossible and it was a half hour before the congestion was relieved. The callers wanted the newspaper and telegraph offices and when they learned what had happened they took to the streets and many of them remained out all night, parading and cheering.

Big Parade

The police force got a band together and in a very short time an impromptu parade was formed in which hundreds of wild and enthusiastic men and women, from all walks of life and in every stage of dress and undress, took part. Up and down town they marched and cheered and waved flags until from pure weariness they could go no longer and one by one dropped out and went home.

Mill Forces Demoralized Among those who shouted loudest and celebrated the most were workmen from the Penn-Harris hotel building. Forgetting the necessity for a good hotel in the city, they laid down the towel and ran to join the parade. Many of the mills which do night work were demoralized when men learned the cheering news. There were many amusing stories told of incidents occurring in the parades. Four men linked arm in arm came up the street running as fast as they possibly could, when they were suddenly halted. They had run into a very stout man. The quartet stumbled and fell and for a few moments there was a free-for-all. The crowd, the most part, however, was very good natured amidst the jostling and bumping which attended the big patriotic conclave.

"Cannon" was the cry raised when a number of automobiles opened cut-outs. The staccato explosions sounded like a battery of Gatling guns in action.

"Some Celebration," Says Mayor Mayor Daniel L. Keister was a prominent figure in the big crowd. "Ah boy, that was some celebration to be arranged in twenty-five minutes," he commented to a Telegraph reporter. "That was some affair, wasn't it?"

"What d'ya suppose will happen to the stock market?" There were hundreds of speculators who tried to form an opinion.

An unfortunate man almost got himself into very serious trouble when he lost his hat on the street. He leaned over to pick it up, putting up his left hand for balance. Someone in the crowd mistook the movement as an effort to strike a nearby woman and he was assailed by the mob. "Lynch him!" was the cry and when an officer took him in charge they shouted "Let us have him for a minute. Tars and feathers for his!" He was taken to the police station and when it was found his action was intentional he was discharged.

There were hundreds of local people in River Park when the bells began ringing. It was but a few minutes until the seats were empty. Traffic rules were suspended and policemen were helpless in their efforts to restore some semblance of order. A staunch patriot came to the Square with a huge American flag. Members of the Municipal and other bands gathered with their instruments and in a few minutes a parade was formed. Thousands of American flags were displayed and from office buildings, the tricolor of France and the Stars and Stripes were thrown. Marchers carried small American flags and paraded through the principal streets of the city. Automobile and motor trucks crammed with patriots, paraded the rest of the populace. Among the thousands who were in the procession were many soldiers and there were other soldiers who lined the streets, waiting eagerly for news from their fellow warriors across the seas.

Community Singing Small processions were formed everywhere on the streets, some ambitious marches leading the parade until the main procession was met and a merger was formed. The big crowd in the Square heard the band play "Keep the Home Fires Burning" and within a few moments community song was under way. There's a Long, Long Trail, "America," "The Star Spangled Banner" and Allan Sanger's popular song, "Your Old Uncle Sammy," were roared forth by the crowd. The songfest was accompanied by a band and was under no leadership.

Theaters Closed Theaters closed and actors at the majestic theater forgot that they were stage costumes, rushing to the street in their footlight attire. The theater crowds heard the din and came running to swell the mob. "What's the news?" was the question on everyone's lips and newspaper offices were stormed by eager inquirers. Wild rumors began to circulate in the crowd. It was related that the German Crown Prince was captured, the Kaiser killed and the entire German army had surrendered. The telephones over the city began ringing and service at the Central offices was demoralized. Telephones at the Bolton House, the Senate and all telephones near Market Square were kept busy when those who could not reach the crowd heard the rumors and questioned the truth. People from throughout the entire city and the suburbs literally poured into the heart of the town. An instance was related of a young man who ran from a Bellevue Park residence to the center of the city where he could join the demonstration. Street cars were so filled with people that it was utterly impossible for many to get into town. Speed laws were forgotten and motorists drove into the city. People from Penbrook and other suburbs were those who waited for the latest news. When telegrams from Middletown and Hummelstown received a favorable reply, parades and big demonstrations were organized in those towns.

Thousands of those who gathered were intimately connected with those at the front. "God bless those boys! My boy's among them," a gray-haired mother cried. "I'll bet Jim was with the bunch," said a man who proudly explained to the crowd that he is Jim's brother. Sweethearts, brothers and sisters stood with the parents of the boys in the trenches, waiting for further word from "over there." "See here, police, I want this noise stopped. I've got to get some sleep so I can work tomorrow," an indignant resident shouted to police headquarters at midnight. "Forget sleep, man and be patriotic," he was told. Between the hours of 10 and 12 hundreds of calls were received at the police station, the questioners asking for all the late news.
