about seventy-five Harrisburgers to fill the ranks to war strength and this company, combined with one from the old Sixteenth National Guard Regiment, forms Company C—The One Hundred and Twelfth.

A brief history of the battling units, to me to read that they were successfully engaged in driving back the Hun. They will certainly be capable of any task assigned them and no officer will find a more willing organization to "carry on" in any drive.

Originated in Civil War Companies D and I of the Eighth Regiment of the old Pennsylvania National Guard, whose members are now right up on the firing line, taking part in the big battle being waged on the fields of France, have had a long and noble career.

LIFT OFF CORNS! Doesn't hurt a bit! Sore corns lift right off with fingers. Magic!

Costs few cents! Drop a little Freezone on that touchy corn, instantly that corn stops hurting, then you lift it right off with the fingers.

Why wait? Your druggist sells a tiny bottle of Freezone for a few cents, sufficient to rid your feet of every hard corn, soft corn, or corn between the toes, and calluses, without soreness or irritation.

The First City Zouaves. In 1862-63, during the Civil War, it served as Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment. In 1863-72 it again took up the name City Zouaves. It passed into the City Grays, being known as such until 1884, when it was enrolled as a unit in the Pennsylvania National Guard, making up Company D of the Eighth Regiment.

The Harrisburg Rifles was organized in the State Library of the State Capitol, in pursuance to a call for recruits, published in Harrisburg papers on April 15, 1861, shortly after the outbreak of the war between the North and the South.

The name Harrisburg Rifles stuck to the organization only a short time. Shortly after the organization was made to change the name of the organization as the First City Zouaves of Harrisburg. This was done and the organization first known as the Harrisburg Rifles.

When the Zouaves became quite proficient in their work and in 1862, when an invasion of Pennsylvania by several Confederate divisions was feared and the War Department issued a call for the enlistment of volunteer militia for three months, the body volunteered as a unit.

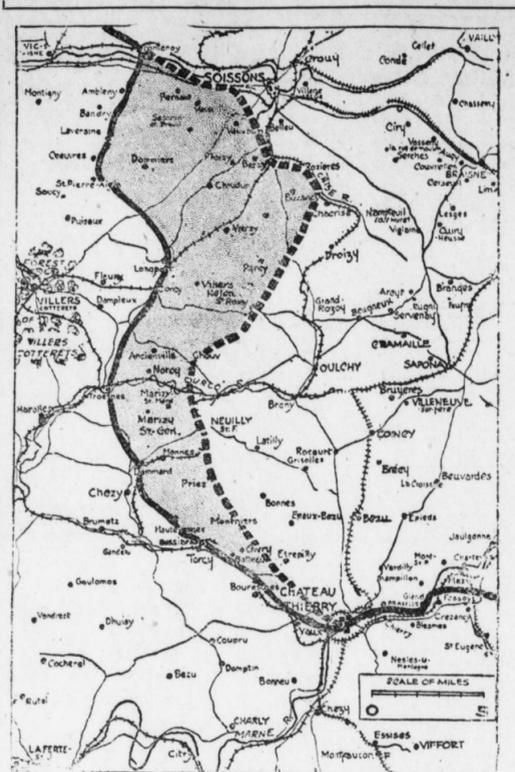

Provided Many Officers Because of its previous drilling, the company was much more proficient than others of the regiment and was detached from it. Special duty work was performed in Harrisburg and Washington.

commissioned officers, Colonel William W. Jennings, well known in Harrisburg, was colonel of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment during the entire nine months of service of Company A.

With the War of the Rebellion finally quelled, the First City Zouaves was reorganized with Lieutenant-Colonel J. Wesley Aul as captain. The unit prospered to such an extent that its numbers soon made it quite unwieldy.

When the Zouaves resumed its local organization, when Governor Curtin issued his proclamation on July 21, 1862, calling for the organization of volunteer regiments for nine months' term under President Wilson's call for 300,000 men, the organization's service was tendered on the day of the issuance of the order.

When the entire body of Pennsylvania National Guardsmen was mustered into the United States service in May, 1898, it became necessary to have another body of citizen soldiers.

When the reorganization of the National Guard took place after the return of the various companies from the United States volunteer service in 1899, Company H, Eleventh Regiment, was transferred to the Eighth Regiment as Company I.

with Mexico. They served along the Mexican Border for a period and were among the first companies to be mustered out of the service.

The Governor's Troop The Governor's Troop of the old Pennsylvania National Guard, many of whose active members are engaged in deadly conflict with the Hun along the western front in France, has had an existence of over thirty years, during which time it has covered itself with much glory.

At the time the troop was organized there were two troops of cavalry in the Pennsylvania National Guard. One was the First City Troop, of Philadelphia, attached to the First Brigade, and the other was the Sheridan Troop, of Tyrone, attached to the Second Brigade.

and lieutenant. With these officers the organization was mustered into the Pennsylvania National Guard by Brigadier General J. P. S. Gobin, of the Third Brigade.

The first opportunity to do active military service came to the company in 1898 when hostilities between the United States and Spain broke out. The service of the Governor's Troop, Pennsylvania Volunteer Cavalry, was creditable to the organization during this conflict.

During its absence from the United States, a second Governor's Troop had been organized. The organization meeting took place on July 21, 1898, with Charles P. Meek, captain; S. Frank Weston, first lieutenant, and Joseph J. Weaver, second lieutenant, on the return from active service of the original troop.

ances, labor and others, in the state. In rifle matches the troop has been active and has taken numerous prizes.

Organized in 1888, the troop has had five captains. Harman A. Perkins, the captain at the time of the organization of the unit, served from February 18, 1888, to May 8, 1891. Frederick M. Ott served from June 5, 1891, to May 12, 1910; Charles P. Meek (Second Governor's Troop), July 21, 1898, to January 31, 1899; George C. Jack, May 28, 1910, to 1917; George W. H. Roberts, 1917.

On Mexican Duty George C. Jack was the captain of the unit when it was called to go into the United States service during the trouble with Mexico in 1916. He served as the head of the troop, then known as Troop C, First Pennsylvania Cavalry, during its eight months' service there. After the muster out, Captain Jack was transferred to the Ordnance Department. He was succeeded by George W. H. Roberts.

There's a best time to buy everything; its when prices are as low as they can be and are sure to be higher later on. That's the clothing situation; we'll have plenty of good clothes this time next year, but they'll cost a little more. If you need good clothes, you can save by getting yours now.
