THE PLOTTERS

A New Serial of East and West
By Virginia Terhune Van de Water

CHAPTER XXXIX

With a dazed, dizzy sensation, John Butler sat down again and tried to assimilate the facts that had just come to him.

Of one thing he was sure. Lizzie Moore's picture had been on Dr. Wade's desk that evening last spring. And it had been the only photograph in the entire office.

Then she must be of enough importance in the physician's life for him to wish to have her face always before him.

Now John Butler understood the sensation of discomfort that had accompanied his recognition of the girl's resemblance to someone whom he thought he had met. It was because, at the time he had so acutely miserable himself. The likeness and his mood were associated in his inner consciousness.

Well, that was explained. But there were many other incomprehensible things facing him.

Of course Douglas Wade had a right to this picture. But the original had not been intimate that she had seen Wade of late years, or had had any communication with him. When she was a little girl she had known him, she said. Why had she not acknowledged that she knew him now?

Butler arrived at the conclusion he had almost reached on the day on which he had spoken to Elizabeth of Wade's attentions to his sister, Alicia. This conclusion was that the girl he admired must be fond of the young physician.

If not, she would not have been startled by the information imparted to her. Nor would she have allowed Wade to have a large picture of her upon his desk. And, clearest evidence of all, she would not have hesitated to admit that she and Wade were on terms of intimate friendship.

Just for a moment Clifford's vile suggestions came to John Butler's mind, but, as usual, he banished them as unbelievable. The girl might care for Douglas Wade. She might even be engaged to him. But whatever she did was honorable and right.

He repeated this statement over and over to himself, and in his heart he knew that he believed it.

But, since his happiness depended upon the state of Elizabeth's affections, he felt that he had a right to study these.

He could not bring himself to the point of questioning the Chapins about their pretended cousin. That would be low and ignoble. But he must know who she was and what her feelings were, or he could not stay where he would see her frequently.

All was fair in love and war, he mused. And he certainly was in love.

First of all, he would write to Dr. Wade.

This he proceeded to do. He acknowledged that he appreciated how phenomenal had been his own physical and mental improvement since his arrival on the farm. He would therefore think seriously of the physician's suggestion that he keep up the present regimen for a while longer. Much depended upon the development of the next few days. He would communicate with the owner of the farm later.

"By the way," he added, "I do not think that I have told you yet how much I admire this part of the country. You have a place of which you may well be proud. But to make it what it should be would take a great deal of money. I wonder if you feel like putting so much money in a place at such a distance from your present home? For, of course, property out here is not very valuable just now. It is lovely, but land in this region will probably be hard to sell until a railroad runs nearer than it does now. And the train service from Midland to the larger cities is very poor.

"The matter of the farm is, however, your affair, and none of mine. When I leave I may never see this spot again. But I shall always be grateful for what it has done for me. I have managed to stand the eccentricities of your farmer. His wife and the friend who is staying with her have done much toward making me comfortable and content."

A grim smile crossed the writer's face.

"There," he exclaimed. "If the 'friend' in question is very dear to him, he may be made a bit uneasy by that statement."

At all events, he hoped it might result in an explanation or revelation of some kind. Almost anything was better than this uncertainty.

The same mail that brought his letter to John Butler brought one for Amos Chapin. It was from his

"My officers always laughed at the little .22 high-power American Savage rifle I carried as a side arm," he added. "They thought it was only a toy. Their opinion of the piece changed, however, when I set out with it to get some of those sharpshooters, and got three of them. Of course, I used the soft-nosed, or dum-dum, bullets; but those Russians deserved anything we could give them."

The jubilation with which the news of the sinking of the Lusitania was received by the German people was general. It was so significant that I believe America would have declared war immediately had it been known. I have failed to find over the dastardly crime, and the activity of the Zeppelins in their raids on open towns evoked similar demonstrations.

That the views which the people here regarding the conduct of the war were strongly influenced by the public press, which was absolutely controlled by the government, was only to be expected. The fact that in peace-time the press of Germany was perhaps the most reliable in the world, made of it a particularly valuable tool in the hands of the government in time of war.

The German newspaper is a gospel to the people. The last word in any argument was always furnished by the press. It is true that the press was not always liberal in its treatment of the Kaiser's territory if the war were being waged. But such suggestions were usually advanced in modified tones and where one was safe in speaking, and they received little consideration.

How the press managed to satisfy the people that everything was going well, even when the outlook was most dismal, can be explained only by the deep faith which the people had in everything they read.

With the capture of Serbia and Rumania, for instance, the people had been promised that most of their food and raw material troubles would be effectually disposed of. Rumania, they had been told, had the largest oil fields in the world, as well as vast food resources; while Serbia was the most productive agricultural section and had the largest copper mines in the world. The realization that no such relief had been promised was forthcoming came to the people very gradually, the press breaking the news most skillfully, a little each day.

So, too, when food conditions necessitated a rationing system, the Berlin papers sought to prepare the public for it by stating that in Dresden such a move was contemplated. A day or two later it would be denied that Dresden had any such plan in contemplation, but that Bavaria had already shortened the ration, and that it was hoped no such measure would be necessary in Berlin.

Then, a day or two later, it would be calmly announced that, as the rest of Germany had adopted the shortened ration, Brandenburg could hardly do less than follow suit.

The slogan, "Gott Strafe England," was not officially used, but when the internal discontent became too serious and strikes were too menacing to be ignored, the government caused large posters of "John Bull" to be posted all over the country. Underneath the pictures "representation of 'John Bull'" was the line, "This man is responsible for your hunger."

The importance which the Kaiser and his leaders placed in public opinion among the German people is clearly illustrated by the announcements they made and the measures they resorted to from time to time, for home consumption.

When in December, 1916, for instance, the Kaiser realized that the resumption of unrestricted submarine warfare, which he had determined upon, might bring neutral nations, including the United States, into the war, he felt that it was necessary to do something to uphold the spirit of his people. It took the form of a proposal of peace to the Allies.

This proposal was designed to accomplish two distinct purposes: First, it was to convince the German people that their Kaiser was really the peace-loving monarch he had always professed to be; second, it was to demoralize the Allies by dividing them against themselves.

This much is certain: The Kaiser never intended the Allies to accept the proposal he made. He admitted to Prince von Pleiss, his most intimate adviser, it was termed in such a way that the Allies could not possibly accept it. But it served one of the purposes which it was intended to achieve, and nearly accomplished the other.

Some of the Socialists in the bel-ligrent countries, and others in neutral countries, accepted the Kaiser's proposal at its face value, and proposed a peace conference at Stockholm. But the allied governments saw through the Kaiser's plan and refused to allow their delegates to attend.

But if the Kaiser did not succeed in embarrassing the Allies to any great extent, he certainly accomplished his first objective—creating the impression among his own people that he was anxious for peace.

Patients came into my office at the time crying with joy at the prospect of early peace, and showering praise on their Kaiser for having been the first to make peace overtures.

The full extent of the Kaiser's hypocrisy in this connection becomes evident when we compare his admitted object in issuing the proposal with the terms in which it is couched. It was not written for the powers to whom it was addressed, but for the power at home—the German people.

The following passages are worth rereading with this fact in mind:

"The most terrific war experience in history has been raging for the last two years and a half over a large part of the world—a catastrophe which thousands of years of common civilization was unable to prevent, and which injures the most precious achievements of humanity.

"Our aims are not to shatter nor annihilate our adversaries. In spite of our consciousness of our military and economic strength and our readiness to continue the war (which has been forced upon us) to the bitter end if necessary; at the same time, prompted by the desire to avoid further bloodshed and make an end to the atrocities of war, the Kaiser's allied powers propose to enter forthwith into peace negotiations."

Emphatically Asserts Worn Out, Lagging Men Can Quickly Become Vigorous and Full of Ambition

7 A DAY FOR 7 DAYS

Don't blame the man who is perpetually tired; his brain needs more rest and his brain and nerves are craving for food.

Given the right kind of medicine, any tired-out, inactive, lagging fellow can quickly be made into a real live, energetic and even ambitious man.

So says a student of the nervous system who advises all men and women who feel worn out and who find it hard to get up ambition enough to take a regular job to get a package of Bio-feren at any drugist.

This is the new discovery that pharmacists are recommending because it is not expensive and speedily puts vigor and ambition into people who despaired of ever amounting to anything in life.

People whose nerves have been wrecked by too rapid living, too much tobacco or alcohol, have regained their old-time confidence and energy in less than two weeks.

No matter from what cause your nerves went back on you; no matter how run down, nervous or tired out you are, get an original package of Bio-feren at once. Take two tablets after each meal and one before bedtime—seven a day for seven days—then one after each meal till all are gone.

Then if you still lack ambition; if your nerves are not steady and you haven't the energy that red-blooded, keen-minded men possess, your purchase money will be gladly returned.

Note to Physicians: There is no secret about the formula of Bio-feren. It is printed on every package. Here it is: Lecithin; Calcium Glycero-phosphate; Iron Peptonate; Manganese Peptonate; Ext. Nux Vomica; Powdered Gentian; Phenolphthalein; Oleoresin Capsicum; Kola.
