"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER XLIII
(Copyright 1918, by Kings Features Syndicate, Inc.)
At breakfast the next morning I asked Jim how Virginia had liked the flowers.

"What flowers?" asked Jim. "Why, you sweet kiddie, I believe you sent her some. They must have come after I left, but 'unsight, unseen; I'll hug you for doing just that."

"It's really Neal you should hug—the idea was his, and so was the money that paid for the posies—he wouldn't let me do anything but select them and write the card," I replied.

"What a dear little shylock it is—so exact in its accounting!" cried Jim, in high good humor. "Well, I'll have to hang on the bathroom door before I leave and tell the swimmer within what a decent young fellow I think him. I'm getting downright fond of our Neal."

I twisted this into an omen that Jim's beautiful sister would soon be downright fond of me, and hurried myself at the phone as soon after Jim's departure as I decently could. Eight-thirty seemed the ideal hour to call the Rochambeau—early enough to be friendly and to watch the girls in, early enough also to give Neal a chance to speak to Phoebe, and still not early enough to have an alarm-clock quality.

But I was wrong. Phoebe's whippers told me how wrong and told me also that "yee" was sleeping after a bad night. She thanked me for the posies with none of the animation I should have expected from her, and young Neal had to go off without a word to Phoebe.

"That's all right," he insisted consolingly. "What's the use of speaking to the 'visiting lady' if you can't invite her out? And I'm down to lunch money, as you know, Nixie! You don't lend me a cent, Anne. This is where friend Neal shows how saving he can be."

When my second "boy" trotted off in high good spirits that sent me whirling through the day's occupations with such vim and vigor that the little home and I were in order by 10; and by quarter past the elevator at the Rochambeau deposited me on the seventh floor.

When I had called Phoebe, almost two hours before, I heard the telephone operator at the Rochambeau say "718." So I made a mental note of that, and with a pleasant, sisterly feeling of sociability I went up without being announced.

But it seemed to be as bad a blunder as phoning at 8:30 had been. Virginia was in a graceful pignoir of amber silk and soft lace, and though she looked lovely enough for all the world to behold, she actually seemed to feel that there was something too terribly informal about appearing before me at breakfast and in breakfast negligee.

From the moment of my first faux pas everything that could manage to go wrong proceeded to do so. Next in order of the "horrors" that took the sunshine out of the day was a sudden glimpse I caught of a vase full of wilted flowers. Before I could turn my startled eyes away from that dejected-looking mass on the tea table Virginia began thanking me for my gift.

"Those dreadful things!" I cried. "They're not what we selected at all. I'm going right over and give that florist a piece of my mind."

"Oh—I wouldn't do that," replied Virginia, coldly.

Then Phoebe broke in with a little explanation that did everything except set me at ease, as she intended.

"You see, it was after midnight when they got here—so perhaps they went to the wrong place by mistake and got spoiled there."

"After midnight?" she exclaimed. "Oh, Virginia, I suppose that accounts for your bad night—you were awakened from your first sleep.

Can you ever forgive me? I'm so sorry!"

Virginia gave Phoebe an annoyed look.

"Dear me, why report the state of my slumbers?" she smiled coldly. "Suppose we don't discuss it any more, Anne—and please don't go over and make a scene at the florist's. I shan't be home all day—so it doesn't matter at all about the flowers, you see."

How I ever got to go the courage after that, I don't know—but I managed to offer to go along shopping, if that were agreeable to Virginia, and I invited both Jim's sisters to lunch with me.

Virginia accepted coldly, but Phoebe ran over and gave me a quick hug as her sister disappeared into the bedroom of the smart suite, for which my poor Jim had offered to pay.

"Did you explain to Neal that I loved his flowers—and was just dying to speak to him?" she whispered.

"Well—hardly. Phoebe. You didn't convey that." I said a bit wryly—passing on, as sensitive folks have a bad way of doing, the hurt I had suffered from someone else.

Rebuffed and flushing, Phoebe hurried into the bedroom after Virginia. I fear she won't make any advances to me soon again. I had an unhappy fifteen minutes of waiting. Then the sisters came out together. Phoebe looking like a pretty, frightened little bird in her brown suit, Virginia regal and seeming unaware of her arresting beauty, in a perfectly plain black dress colored in mole-skin.

We spent two hours at the interior decorators—but but never once in all that time did Virginia ask Phoebe's opinion—or mine. Evidently she makes her own decisions.

In keeping with that observation I asked her to select the place where we should lunch—and never was setting more absolutely made for a woman than the clean-cut elegance of Carlier's, the restaurant of her choice, was for Virginia Dalton.

"Oh, this is perfect!" cried Phoebe, sinking back into her chair with a luxurious air of complete contentment.

"It will be, I'm sure—after Virginia orders the lunch," I replied with the intent to honor my guest—and to save myself the difficulties of dealing with the menu and the smart-looking captain who stood deferentially waiting our pleasure.

Then, as I sat back in turn and began to drink in the quiet elegance of the place and the stunning people all about us, my mind focused on what Virginia was saying, and my eyes wandered back to the menu in front of me. A little calculation in mental arithmetic followed:

Clams for three $1.20
Bread and butter40
Eggs benedictine 1.80
Coffee75

Total $5.65

And in my purse there was the $5 Neal had given me a week before—the $5 and a little silver. Less than enough to pay that check.

To Be Continued.

Thompson said he wants every property owner to appeal who thinks the proper valuation has not been fixed on the property.

M. Thompson also issued a statement showing that during the first ten months of 1918 there had been 1,599 properties sold in the city with an assessed valuation of $3,754,510, as compared with 1,335 sales in the same period in 1917 with a valuation of $2,717,420.

Following are the ward valuations:

Getting Too Fat? Try This—Reduce

People who don't grow too fat are the fortunate exception. But if you find the fat accumulating or already cumbersome, you will be wise to follow this suggestion, which is endorsed by thousands of people who know. Ask your druggist (or if you prefer write to the Marmola Co., 864 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich.) for a large case of Marmola Prescription Tablets. The price the world over. By doing this you will be safe from harmful drugs and be able to reduce two, three or four pounds a week without dieting or exercise.

Gray Hair
Gray Hair Health
A preparation for restoring natural color to gray or faded hair, for removing dandruff and as a hairdresser is not a dye. Secures bottles at dealers, ready to use. Philo Hay Co., Newark, N. J.

Try This If You Have Dandruff

There is one sure way that never fails to remove dandruff completely and that is to dissolve it. This destroys it entirely. To do this, just get about four ounces of plain, ordinary liquid arvon; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Very morning, most if not all of your dandruff will be gone, and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single sign and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and itching of the scalp will stop instantly, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, silky and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid arvon at any drug store. It is inexpensive, and four ounces is all you will need. This simple remedy has never been known to fail.

Relief from Eczema

Don't worry about eczema or other skin troubles. You can have a clear, healthy skin by using a little zemo, obtained at any drug store for 35c, or extra large bottle at $1.00.

Zemo generally removes pimples, blackheads, blotches, eczema and ringworm and makes the skin clear and healthy. Zemo is a clean, penetrating, antiseptic liquid, neither sticky nor greasy and stains nothing. It is easily applied and costs a mere trifle for each application. It is always dependable.
