

COMMUTERS NOT TO LOSE UNDER TICKET RULINGS

Cost of Tickets For Fractions of February Will Be Prorated

Commuters of the Central Pennsylvania territory, as well as those of all other districts, will be protected from financial loss through the change of the sale of commuters' tickets from a thirty-day to a monthly basis...

At first it was thought that when the new method went into effect on February 1 some commuters' tickets expire at times other than the first of the month...

The Administration announcement says, among other things:

"In districts where commutation travel is heavy, conductors have very little opportunity to scrutinize tickets. When the tickets are limited to thirty days from date of sale, each individual ticket must be examined...

Commuters Protected

"In order to deal fairly with commuters and make for as little friction as possible in the transition from the use of the old styles of fifty-four-trip and sixty-trip monthly commutation tickets to a calendar-month basis, the Railroad Administration has instructed all railroads that they may sell to commuters who have purchased tickets during the month of January expiring during the month of February other tickets for the remainder of the month of February for a sufficient number of rides to equal two trips per day at the same rate per ride as the original ticket."

It was stated that the monthly tickets will be placed on sale four days before the beginning of the month for which they are issued, in order to enable the commuters to obtain them in advance. The new system, it was pointed out, while being entirely fair to the commuter who gives the conductor a ticket every day, will have a very great advantage to the railroads, not only in simplifying accounting, but in collecting tickets.

Commission Has No Information

The order of the United States Railway Administration to the effect that commutation tickets hereafter must be sold for the calendar month only has not yet reached the Public Service Commission. The Public Service Commission in 1914 issued an order whereby these tickets could be sold for thirty days at any time in the month, and this order is still in effect. Under the law, the order could not be changed in less than three years. That period has expired.

In the past the Federal Railway Administration in establishing new rate tariffs (and the sale of commutation tickets comes under such tariffs) has asked the Commission for approval, and this has been granted.
