ARMY TRAINING FOR ALL ASKED BY FARM BOARD

Agriculturists Request Government to Release All Farmers From Service

The last day of the great agricultural show saw a general sale of products at the Emerson-Brantingham building where the bidding was fast and fairly high; an important meeting of the beekeepers and a final session of the Horticultural Association. It was the highest class and most productive annual ever held and brought in more farmers than ever before. All prize-giving had been cleaned up except for vegetables, which were as follows, first prizes only:

- Class No. 1—Best ten specimens beets, A. E. Stoner, Penbrook. Class No. 7—Best three roots horseradish, W. G. Wenker, Tacony. Class No. 8—Best six bulbs yellow onions, James Hamm, Weatherly. Class No. 9—Best six bulbs white onions, William Paul, Millersburg, R. D. No. 2. Class No. 10—Best six bulbs red onions, Mrs. C. S. McDowell, Speakerville. Class No. 11—Winter squash, H. C. Garber, Colonial Acres, Harrisburg. Class No. 12—Winter squash, H. C. Garber, Colonial Acres, Harrisburg. Class No. 13—Best three stalks celery, W. G. Wenker, Tacony. Class No. 14—Commercial package carrots, S. H. Starkey, Bustleton.

If the plans of the bee-growers mature, as they were talked over with Dr. H. A. Surface, chairman of the Pennsylvania State Board of Agriculture, it is believed that a plenty of the luscious nectar, he introduced C. N. Greene, chief apiary adviser of the Department of Agriculture, who told how honey had come to new demand during the war on account of the fact that it is scarce. He predicted acadia for honey growers if they helped in state co-operation with the department.

In his words it appears that the northern, southern and southeastern countries have the best grazing for a honey bee and this means that the state is to go in, full tilt, for migratory honey bees. The way to make money out of the bee is to have a motor truck and coax the bees into it for a ride to where the feeding is good. Choice spots are along the Delaware, and in Chester county, where there is a thick, golden rod and astor. E. E. Reeder, of Shamokin, gave a talk on this subject also, declaring that the migratory process is always profitable. It developed that the industry at present is a sum of $9,000,000 but comparatively few are identified with the association and a campaign is to be immediately started to get in 50,000 more.

Universal military training for youths and the immediate release of farmers from Army service were recommended yesterday at the closing session of the State Board of Agriculture. Prof. Fredric Rasmussen, the new Secretary of Agriculture, was the principal speaker at yesterday's session. He urged the farmers to organize when the subject of the labor shortages was broached.

Agriculturists insist on high prices in feed who insist on high prices was urged by Louis Piolet, of Wyoming county, who was elected vice-president of the board in Wednesday's elections. He also urged farmers to raise their own feed where possible.

The State Potato Growers' Association elected officers, as follows: President, John Park; Horsham; vice-president, D. C. Hopkins, Lehigh county; secretary, Nicholas Schmitz, State College; treasurer, committee, Chester K. Sault, Reading, and Charles J. Preston, State College. C. E. Fassett, of the United States Department of Agriculture, advocated careful grading of potatoes in order to get the benefit of the best market prices. The afternoon session was given over to the discussion of spraying.

The State Horticultural Association re-elected against a truck and for one year. It was dairy day for the State Breeders' and Dairymen's Association and Secretary of Agriculture Rasmussen spoke on co-operation. A. A. Borland in a lecture on the "Crazy feed situation" urged the use of roughage feed for cattle and less of the highly concentrated feeds. The judging of eggs, potatoes and small grains was completed at the state farm products show and the awards announced. The Pennsylvania Holstein-Friesian Association held a sale of registered Holstein cattle, which was attended by the large-crowd ever collected at a sale in this section and showed the interest in selected stock.

That Spring Council Fire

In at headquarters several days ago, a suggestion was made that the Scouts hold an annual spring council fire to welcome the bluebird and the robin and to celebrate the death of old King Winter. The suggestion is a good one and the idea is one that comes down from the days of the Indian, the lover and scout of scouts, the Indian, kindled such a fire when with a flapping of wings and shrill cries the wild duck flew northward and settled for the summer on the north land lakes and ponds. From time immemorial, a blazing fire has been connected with the idea of celebration. It is only in recent years that bonfires have marked the celebration of Christmas and the Fourth of July. To this day, college students can not celebrate a great barn or the village board and the Fourth of July. To this day, college students can not celebrate a great barn or the village board and the Fourth of July. To this day, college students can not celebrate a great barn or the village board and the Fourth of July.

All through American history is the crackle of burning logs, the odor of wood smoke and the spirit of the campfire. By its flickering light the pioneer explorer and daring explorer wrote their journals along the banks of the Mississippi. The dancing flames were companions to the pioneers who pushed their way into the trackless forests, blazing the trails for the generations that were to follow them.

Some one has said, "Light a fire anywhere and there is the spirit of home." Every Scout who has sat at the fireside on an overnight hike knows the truth of that statement. The resting place for the night may be in an open field, it may be a cleared space in a desolate woods or a forlorn and rocky cove along the river. There may be no element of beauty in the landscape—but wait! A crooked ungainly flag pole is erected; from its top there waves a flag or pennant; duffie is lying on the ground; firewood is gathered; a fire is kindled and there is a ruddy glow in the gathering dusk. A pot is soon boiling over the fire; the odor of supper is on the air and when you sit down to the steaming meal, you are ready to call the camp site "home, sweet home."

Night settles over the land. Heavy logs are rolled on top fire and you gather in the circle of light and pass the evening with songs and stories. Never were the old songs so rich and touching to the heart. Stories that are told are never forgotten, for where can one find a better background for story telling than at the scene at the campfire? The flames sink lower and lower and with their die the songs and stories. Jim's eyes are half closed in reverie as he gazes steadfast at the glowing embers. Bob, tired and sleepy dozes on a blanket with his feet near the fire. Slim's eyes, wide open have a far-away look and he probably sees in the dying flames the scene to which the spell of the fire has carried his dreams. All is quiet. No one knows what his neighbor is thinking about, but look at the expressions on the faces! Never again, except in the light of another fire will you see the frank, honest, yes—beautiful expressions on the faces of those friends, Hope, Youth, Ideals, Ambition, these are the things we read on those faces that reflect the fading glow.

The golden dreams, daring adventures and brilliant hopes that flourish in the spell of the fire may be forgotten in the cold gray light of dawn, but they have had their hour of triumph and they have left their impression. Come back to this spot a year from now; find the cold ashes of to-night's fire and the whole scene lives again. Again you find that spirit of "home."

Yes, fellows, I am in favor of the spring campfire! Also a summer campfire and a fall campfire and a winter campfire! We can't have too many campfires. Let us know more often the feeling of comradeship and brotherhood that lives where the campfire lives. Let us know more often the red blood charm, the moral influence and the magic spell of the
