"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LISLE

A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problems of a Girl Wife

By Ann Lisle.
CHAPTER CLXXXII.

"What time is the woman coming to help you pack?" asked Jim, when the last day in our little home rolled around.

"I only hope she comes," I replied inactively; but at sight of Jim's face I added hastily, "Now don't call me a miser again! I went to several agencies, but none of them had anyone in. But, finally, at the last place, they said that they'd try to have a woman here this morning."

"Well, you'd better phone and see," ordered Jim in great annoyance.

But when the agency couldn't promise me anyone, he decided to stay home and help me, and phoned the office to say he wouldn't be down 'till after lunch.

"Now you start with the bedroom and I'll take the living room, and we'll work toward each other," said Jim, with a great air of efficiency; adding jovially: "We ought to meet about halfway between the gas stove and the ice chest."

So I immersed myself at once in stowing our wearables in the wardrobe and piling our other possessions in Jim's big suitcase and some bags. I was working away so busily that I didn't hear the door bell ring, and had a real surprise when Jim came to the door and announced that it was getting toward noon and Mrs. O'Callahan had come from the agency to see if we wanted her for the rest of the day.

"We don't need her now"—I began, but Jim interrupted:

"Don't be just! I left her out there finishing up the living room and I'm going to beat it for the office."

"Jim, we haven't any beds or anything, where are we going to sleep to-night?" I asked suddenly.

"You funny kid!" laughed Jim in-

THE HEART BREAKER

A REAL AMERICAN LOVE STORY BY VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

CHAPTER LXXII.

Copyright, 1919, Star Company.

"Who is that?" Mildred demanded as Honora turned the knob.

"It is I; unlock the door," the elder girl replied.

"The key turned in the lock and Honora entered the lighted bedroom. Mildred stood in her nightdress in front of her.

"Well!" the younger girl questioned defiantly. "What have you to say to me?" Go ahead—call me all the names you have ready for me!"

Honora was stunned. She had imagined Mildred as wretched, heart-broken, but not as a resentful, angry creature. She did not know what to say, so said nothing until she had removed her hat and jacket. Mildred standing by the open door.

At last Honora spoke in a matter-of-fact tone. "Shut that door, Milly, and get back to bed."

Mildred obeyed the first command. She shut the door, then looked it.

"I won't have Mrs. Higgins coming prying in here," she said.

"Of course you told her of my note," Mildred retorted. "Get back to bed."

Instead, Mildred sank into a chair and her sister threw a warm blanket robe about her, and brought her her slippers.

"Put these on," she advised. "There is no need of catching cold. There is trouble enough already without this."

"Trouble!" Mildred laughed harshly. "Did you see this evening's paper?"

Honora nodded silently.

"Well, it was all a lie!" Mildred burst forth. "What I wrote you was the truth. Tom has some enemy who made up that lie, and who kept him from meeting me to-night. I know it."

"You are mistaken in that last statement," Honora corrected. "She stood watching her sister, she dared to show. For Mildred must know the truth. Yet how would the child take it?"

"Oh, you think you know it all because you've tried to get on our track!" Mildred sneered. "You know it!"

"Honora is a Good Angel"

"Milly, don't," she begged, "stop crying and listen! Nobody in all the world knows about this—nobody but Arthur and me. And Arthur will never breathe a word of it—any more than if you were his own sister. You are sure of that."

From the silence, the speaker knew that the girl was listening.

"Thank you," Honora went on, "that nobody will ever know. Even Chandler himself need never suspect that you believed a word he said. He can fancy that you saw through his sham devotion and were only amusing yourself with him. Where did he tell you to meet him?"

"At the entrance to Forest Park."

think I did not know that you and Arthur went through the station looking for us this evening? Well, I was there and saw you. But you did not find us, did you?"

"We did not find you," Honora admitted significantly.

"The strong emphasis on the last word startled the listener.

"What do you mean?" she demanded.

"Just what I said—that we did not leave anything about you until we reached home. We did find out about Tom Chandler."

Mildred sprang up and caught her sister by the arm. "What do you mean?" she repeated breathlessly. "What do you mean?" "What have they done to him?"

"Hush, Milly, hush!" Honora warned. "Nobody has done anything to him. He went away of his own accord."

"He didn't!" Mildred contradicted. Then, illogically, "Where has he gone?"

"He went as far as Hartford to-night," Honora replied. She knew now that she must seem cruel to her sister. "He went to Hartford with that woman we saw him with on the train—the woman he calls 'Kitty.' They registered at a hotel in Hartford as man and wife."

For an instant the slight figure swayed and then the girl stamped her foot.

"How dare you say that?"

"Because I know it!"

"Who told you? Who saw her?"

"I saw her. I went to Hartford myself, Milly. I went to that hotel."

Mildred sank again into the chair and buried her face in her hands. "Who went with you?" she whispered.

"Arthur."

"So he knows it all!" the girl moaned. "I hate him for it!"

Then all her anger was swept away in a flood of tears.

"Oh," she sobbed. "I wish I was dead! Why should things like this happen to me? I never did anything really wrong. You could not be flirting, for there is no sin in that, nor in letting a man you know well kiss you. Yet had I gone the pace, as that other girl—that dreadful Kitty—has, Tom would have cared about me enough to keep his word to me. As it is, he has made a fool of me and everybody will know it!"

He was to come there with a car and take me to the train. When he did not come, I waited for an hour, then went to the station. He must have gone before I got there."

An hour later—fater she had persuaded her sister to return to her bed, and the room was dark—Honora asked Mildred one question that she felt she must have answered without further delay.

"Milly, dear," she inquired timidly, "do you love Tom Chandler?"

"No!" was the sharp response. "I loathe him now! I don't believe I ever did really care for him. He interested me—that's all."

Honora sighed in mystification even while she breathed another prayer of thanksgiving—a silent one this time.

How Fat Folks May Become Thin

If you are suddenly becoming stout, or if you have been putting on flesh for years, the cause is generally the same—lack of oxygen carrying power of the blood. This trouble occurs mostly in men and women over thirty, but it may be easily treated and without any of the privations most fat people imagine necessary to reduce their weight. Simply go to your druggist and get a box of Phynola. Take five grains after each meal and at bedtime. Wonderful results should be quickly accomplished by this simple treatment.

Be sure however you get the genuine Phynola. It is put up in original sealed packages, is pleasant to take and gives prompt results. Gorges, the druggist, stores 16 N. 3rd St. Third and Walnut Sts. and Carma. R. R. Station, can supply you.

HOW TO JUDGE A WOMAN BY HER HAIR

There is real common sense in just noticing whether the hair is well kept to judge of a woman's neatness or good taste. If you are one of the few who try to make the most of your hair, remember that it is not advisable to wash the hair with any cleanser made for all purposes, but always use some good shampoo. You can enjoy the very best by getting some carthrom from your druggist, dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of hot water. This makes a full cup of shampoo liquid, enough so it is easy to apply it to all the hair instead of just the top of the head. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so fluffy that it will look much heavier than it is. Its luster and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth.
