Eight-Hour Day Fixed By Shamokin Merchants

Shamokin, Pa., July 5.—Blazing the trail for local industries and other employers of woman labor, the merchants of Shamokin to-day announced their unanimous decision to adopt an eight-hour day in all stores and offices effective July 14.

With 3,000 local silk workers on strike for an eight-hour day, the movement on the part of the merchant establishes an unusual precedent and is believed to lay basis for a similar work day in all local industries.

Heretofore clerks in stores were on a fifty-four-hour week basis and will receive the same wages under the forty-eight-hour week.

This news item speaks for itself. When the leading merchants of a city put their moral force back of a worthy movement, such as this, they are taking a broad view of economic reforms. The eight-hour day is becoming universal. A shorter workday for the employed decreases the number of unemployed.

This store closes at six on Saturdays, so its employes are not obliged to work over eight hours on any of the six days.
