Visiting the Shops With Adele
BY ADELE

EVERY woman naturally wishes to look her best. And every wise woman realizes that half the battle lies in being properly governed. At this peculiar stage of the game, cool, fresh-looking summer frocks are essential in gaining this end. But the question is, "Where can I find the daintiest, prettiest ones?" A visit to the Closs Shop, in the Penn-Harris building, will answer that query most effectively. Frocks of organdy in white, French shades of orchid solve the problem of how to look both cool and charming. One bit of daintiness in flesh-colored organdy is particularly appealing. A blue satin sash adds a tantalizing French note and finely plaited trills coquettishly tempt you to make it your own. The skirt has an overdraped effect. Another little model of pink French dainties to rely upon large tucks and a vest and collar of organdy for its effectiveness.

THERE is probably no other country in the world where art holds such a high place as in Japan. Every article, no matter what its purpose, is produced with a special view to its being beautiful, not only in workmanship, but in design and adaptability to its use. The worker is sure to belong to a class of artisans whose craft has descended through many generations and thus represents an accumulated skill that is quite impossible to obtain under new-world factory conditions. The truth of this statement is being demonstrated at the Art and Gift Shop, 195 North Second street, where beautiful examples of Japanese lemonade and tea sets are exhibited. One particular pattern, in pink and white, with dogwood blossom design, is especially delightful. Surely any beverage would taste just a trifle better when sipped from such attractive ware. The same thing would hold true of the breakfast eaten from the desirable breakfast sets also featured at this shop.

IN these days of high prices in the shoe world it is a real pleasure to know that we can sometimes purchase footwear for a remarkably small sum. And when a merchant offers such values as W. F. Paul, 11 North Fourth street, is offering, we undoubtedly owe him a vote of thanks. Due to the fact that mid-summer is here and he still has many pumps of small size and narrow width remaining, he has decided to put them on sale at unbelievably low figures. When I say that those with present market values of from $6.00 to $10.00 will have some idea of the wholesale slaughter in prices. These pumps are not the type with exaggeratedly long vamp and pointed toe, but are of more staple style. Being of the finest grade, their wearing properties will please even those who are notoriously "hard" on their shoes.

IN devastated northern France, before the war clouds deepened, I saw wonderful upholstered fabrics of quality and design were woven to beautify homes throughout the world. Some of them found their way to this city—straight to the shop of J. Porter Harris & Son, 221 North Second street. Naturally, they sold rapidly and at the outbreak of the war only remnants, averaging from a yard to a yard and a half in length, remained. These were guarded jealously in the hope that at some future day the patterns could be duplicated. Now, since the futility of such hopes is evident, they have been placed on sale at unusually reduced prices. At the same time, cretonne remnants, of discontinued patterns, much cheaper in value, but excellent for porch cushions, are offered for a mere song.

I VISITED a home the other day in the midst of a family tragedy. The baby, an adorable bunch of pink and white humanity, had innocently destroyed a photograph of her soldier brother. There it lay, torn to shreds, and the mother who mourned its loss had only herself to blame. In the first place, she had taken the precaution of having it framed, baby fingers could not have mutilated it. But she simply neglected the matter. Let me urge others who possess photographs of soldier boys to profit by this incident. Don't wait until too late to take measures for preserving your prized possession, but visit Salzman's, 222 North Second street, where standing or hanging frames in antique gold, walnut and mahogany can be obtained. They are appropriately decorated with service stars, eagles, flags and coats-of-arms and are sure to please.

THIS is the time of the year when every man begins to feel dissatisfied with the straw hat he purchased early in the season. Discolored by constant wear, it no longer presents a fresh appearance. So the up-to-the-minute man who realizes the distinct advantage of wearing a new, unsoiled hat, will be overjoyed to hear that, beginning tomorrow, Doubtrichs are giving him an opportunity to procure one at half price. Despite the fact that every straw hat in the establishment will be worth a dollar more, wholesale, next year, the entire stock will be disposed of. Those that originally sold for from $2.00 to $10.00 will be placed on sale at from $1.50 to $5.00, allowing a new hat for what it would cost to have an old one cleaned. This policy of this live store is to carry nothing over from season to season. And the hundreds of men who have been eagerly awaiting this money-saving opportunity will profit thereby, both now and in the future.

Morning Shopping In the Summer

If one can possibly arrange it, it's a good plan to shop mornings at any time of the year. It means that one avoids the hurry and confusion of the afternoon rush: it makes for a leisurely, carefully studied selection of one's purchase.

In the summer, however, there's a double advantage to shopping in the morning. The hottest time of day is generally in the afternoon. By shopping in the morning you avoid the scorching heat of the afternoon sun and you can remain in the shade of your own front porch during the most trying hours.

Try shopping in the morning once. See if you don't contract the habit.
