Visiting the Shops with Adele

WE are told that in England a bead craze is sweeping the country. Women appear in the streets with long strings of jet and amber reaching below the hems of their skirts. All we can say is, "Preferes from such a length!" But the craze is not limited to beads. No, indeed! On the contrary, we are quite partial to them and we only wish that every woman and girl in the country were fortunate enough to possess a bead necklace such as the French and the "boys" in the hospitals are making. Everyone has seen them and knows just how pretty they are. And everyone will be delighted to learn that beads, marbles and instructions for making them can all be obtained at the Art and Gift Shop, 105 North Second street, where you will also find a beautiful assortment of Venetian beads.

DID you ever hear the old Greek tale of Jason, who sailed away to find the golden fleece? It is just one more story typifying the troubles we oftentimes encounter when we start on a search for the things we most desire. And for some reason Jason always reminds me of the gift seeker who sets forth in an apparently vain effort to procure such a thing as "The Goodies." So many people are afflicted with that peculiar trouble. They rush madly hither and thither and never seem to find the type of gift that satisfies; and they are never so good as to be wise enough to visit the Saltzberg Art and Gift Shop, 223 North Second street, where the attractive bookkeepers, secones and candlesticks are in themselves enough to settle all difficulties.

TIME was when we never drank coffee at our house. We always kept it on hand for our guests, but, as for drinking it ourselves—well, we just didn't care for it at all. But those days have passed and I humbly accept the blame for the change that has recently taken place. It all came about because I started to visit the Penn-Harris Tea Company, 208 North Second street. Then one day I bought a pound of their celebrated coffee and took it home. We all swallowed a sip, just to see if it really was so good as it is claimed, and—well—we were drinking it ever since! Truly, it's delicious. Nothing could be better. Everyone who has ever tasted it never tires of singing its praises and to offer them any other brand is useless.

YOU'VE all seen Sterno stoves, haven't you? But how many of you have seen the newest "canned-fuel" stove, the Therax? It is so far superior to the old type that a comparison is almost foolish. With its special cooking utensils are unnecessary—just use the kettle, pot, pan or percolator you now have. Place it on the tripod stand, then slip a can of Therax fuel beneath it and apply the match. That is all that is required. This quickest, hottest and safest emergency fuel—used extensively by the United States and Canadian Governments during the World War—will do the rest. For you who live in roominghouses or for the grille at boarding school, a Therax outfit is absolutely indispensable. Do I hear anyone who says, "The Therax is too good to get?" Well, get it at the Art and Gift Shop, 105 North Second street, and they're extremely inexpensive, the stoves costing 25 cents and the fuel 15 cents a can.

SOME day—let us hope that it is not far off—shoes are going to take a drop in price. But, until they do, we must make the best of the matter and see to it that we receive good value for the rather large sum of money we spend in shodding our feet. We don't mind paying from ten to fifteen dollars for shoes if they only wear well. And that is exactly what those you purchase at Paul's Shoe Shop, 11 North Fourth street, are guaranteed to do. At present, Mr. Paul is showing a snappy assortment of brown kid and calf boots with high Louis and Cuban, as well as military, heel. And will they give good service? Well, just try them and see!

AND now we greet the Miss Manhattan suit! And truly we can say, "I'm pleased to meet you." Indeed, it requires no effort at all to utter those words after having seen the stunning garment of mahogany velour hanging in the Cloos Shop, in the Penn-Harris building. Of exceptional style and quality, it displays a discreet amount of self embroidery, a narrow belt effect and a collar to be worn either high or low. It is cleverly trimmed with buttons and the rich, brocaded lining is almost too lovely to hide. But, then, it must be beautiful in order to reach the standard set by the rest of the suit.
