No More Does the Workman Knock Off to the Tune of the Early Evening Siren of Long Ago

The six o'clock whistle is with us no more. No longer do we hear at the fall of the evening the scream which sounded so much like the daughter of our neighbor who is taking her first singing lesson.

This eight-hour, six-hour, or any other day has placed the whistle which marks the closing time on a par with the well known will-o'-the-wisp.
