"When a Girl Marries"

By ANN LESLIE
A New, Romantic Serial Dealing With the Absorbing Problem of a Girl Wife

CHAPTER CXXXVII
(Copyright, 1919, King Feature Syndicate, Inc.)

"Anna, you old fraud, have you cut me off your visiting list?" came a strident yet lovable voice over the phone a day or two after our evening at bridge at Val's, from which I returned unhappy.

"Don't get fresh, Miss Sturges," I replied, using Carlotta's own methods of speech. "I have been busy, but that hasn't kept me from sending out through Neal that you were vacationing with your daddy. And I haven't noticed that you think I'm a member of a large collection of picture postals relating what a staid time you were having."

"It pays to advertise, but I always disremember that," I laughed. "Howsoever, here I am back in the city again—brought by a telegram from my partners, Pat and Neal, who seem to think they're stuck in the frozen North for the next week. Would you cheer the wanderer by meeting her for lunch?"

"I would that," I replied heartily. Then we named the time and place and said good-by. The conversation left me greatly heartened. It made up for the left-out-of-things feeling which had come over me the evening I noted the great intimacy existing between the Cosbys, Pettings and my Jim, and the conceals from which I was shut out.

I hadn't heard from Anthony Norneys for a fortnight, and it seemed a great coincidence that he telephoned me within five minutes of Carlotta's call. He had a letter from Betty which, as usual, he was generously ready to share with me. We both understood, without putting it into words, that Betty, by tortuously spelling out letters with her left hand, could bring herself to write to him whose right hand was gone as war's aftermath, even though she couldn't communicate with me who hadn't been touched by that maiming cataclysm.

After I had arranged for Tony to meet Carlotta and me I realized that I had undoubtedly asked Virginia, too. For a minute I took an impish delight in the thought of her discomfiture at being brought face to face

CHAPTER LXXXV
(Copyright, 1919, Star Company)

Henry Andrews regarded David DeLaine gravely and thoughtfully. He saw that the young man was much agitated. He remembered that, only yesterday, he, Andrews, had told his new client that he did not detect in him any of the eccentric qualities which his uncle and aunt had possessed. He wondered now if he had been premature in forming this opinion.

Then he remembered that within the past year this fellow had been through a great mental strain. Not only had he been in France, wounded and ill, but he had found himself penniless, had sought work under an assumed name, then, suddenly, become the heir to a large fortune.

It was not to be marvelled at that his nerves were in a state to make him a bit unreasonable.

Andrews reread once again the paper David had written. Of course it was not legal. He had explained this to the writer. Yet no harm could come of compliance with his client's request. If DeLaine changed his mind and regretted that he had ever signed the document it could be destroyed. It was improbable now that David would ever meet Miss Leighton. If he did not, the estate would never be his, anyway. If he did, and married her—why, as Andrews had just remarked, the fortune must come to him in spite of all protests he might prepare now. Then, if he wished, he could dispose of the entire property. It would be his to do as he pleased with. But that was a very remote contingency.

David might as well be humored in his whim. It would soothe his wounded pride and re-establish his damaged self-respect.

"You insist upon this?" Andrews asked now. "After all that I have told you?"

"I do," was the decided reply.

"Very well," Andrews agreed. "I will have my stenographer draw up the document."

Ten minutes later the paper was handed to David for his signature, which was witnessed by the office boy.

Putting It Off
"I will keep this," Andrews said, "until you ask me for it. I hope you will think better of it later on."

"I never shall," was the obstinate rejoinder. "I know you consider me a fool. Probably I am. But I do feel better for having set down in black and white positive proof of the sincerity of my convictions and intentions."

"And now," with a quick change of tone, "I am going to promise not to trouble you again for a few days. I think," nonchalantly, "that I will run to New York and get some decent clothes."

"It was just thinking how well dressed you are," the lawyer remarked.

David smiled as he glanced down at his well-fitting garments.

"This is the spirit I bought when I first struck this country some weeks ago—before I learned how poor I was. Then, when I went to work at a job, I took another name and put on an old, shabby suit. He did not say what kind of work

BLAME TROOPS FOR KIDNAPING

Government Officials Learn Carranza's Men Were Implicated

Washington, Oct. 28.—Official information received from Mexico City indicates that Carranza soldiers unquestionably were implicated in the kidnaping of William O. Jenkins, the American consular agent at Puebla, who was abducted October 19 and released only after his friends in Puebla had paid to the kidnapers $150,000 in American gold.

State Department officials have not been officially notified of the implication of Carranza military in the history of recent years in Mexico, but it is known that they look to the Mexican government to reimburse promptly the friends of Jenkins.

Reports regarding Jenkins' physical condition and details of his kidnaping have been asked by the department and it was announced that

Army Air Service Loses $15,000,000 by Act

Washington, Oct. 28.—After eliminating the Senate provision of $15,000,000 for the Army Air Service and reducing the appropriation for the Alaska railroad from $17,000,000 to $6,000,000, House and Senate conferees reached an agreement yesterday on the general deficiency bill of this session.

The conferees also reduced from $2,312 to $4,000 the appropriation for the expenses of the International Labor Conference to be held here and eliminated the appropriation of $35,000 for the National Industrial Conference, expenses of that meeting having been paid out of the contingent fund. The Senate appropriation of $5,000,000 for the Vocational Education Board was retained.

Combing Won't Rid Hair of Dandruff

The only sure way to get rid of dandruff is to dissolve it, then you destroy it entirely. To do this, get about four ounces of ordinary liquid paraffin; apply it at night when retiring; use enough to moisten the scalp and rub it in gently with the finger tips.

Do this to-night, and by morning most, if not all, of your dandruff will be gone and three or four more applications will completely dissolve and entirely destroy every single grain and trace of it, no matter how much dandruff you may have.

You will find, too, that all itching and itching of the scalp will stop at once, and your hair will be fluffy, lustrous, glossy, and soft, and look and feel a hundred times better.

You can get liquid paraffin at any drug store. It is inexpensive and never fails to do the work.

300,000 Persons in Industries Are Hurt Each Year, Says Report

Washington, Oct. 28.—It is estimated by the Federal Board for Vocational Education that fully 300,000 persons in the United States are injured in the pursuits of industry each year. More than 10 per cent of that number require complete retraining because of the nature of their disability, which does not permit of their return to their old positions. More than 30 per cent of these unfortunates have dependents.

The law provides that half a million dollars will be available the first year. The second year $750,000 will be available, and the third year the government will allow $1,000,000 for the rehabilitation of the handicapped men, women and children.

DAILY HINT ON FASHIONS

AGED MOTHER SETS EXAMPLE FOR SON

"Knowing what Tanlac did for my 80-year-old mother, I immediately decided to try it when catarrh and indigestion began to get the best of me," said W. L. Farrow, 1200 W. Montgomery ave., Phila. "I had lost 34 pounds. Tanlac soon drove the catarrh out of my system and righted my stomach. I'm gaining weight and feeling fine now."

Catarrh is the most frequent cause of dyspepsia, Bright's disease, deafness and often serious lung troubles. Thousands have testified to Tanlac's powers over this dreaded disease. People suffering from droppings in the throat, headaches, coughing up of mucus, fullness of the head, gastritis, frequent sneezing and watery eyes should immediately take Tanlac, which is sold here by all leading druggists.
