FLOCK HURRIES TO AID PASTOR

Elkton Folk Object to Title of Marrying Parson For Mr. McElmoyle

Elkton, Md., Nov. 24.—Many residents of Elkton are aroused over the alleged attempt of three elders of the Elkton Presbyterian Church to oust the Rev. John McElmoyle from his position as pastor because of the great number of marriages at which he has officiated.

Warren J. Haines, a member of the congregation, charges that the marriage record of Mr. McElmoyle is being used as a pretext in a family feud which is the outcome of a long series of disputes between the pastor and the elders of the church. "McElmoyle has been unjustly called the 'marrying parson' of Elkton," said Mr. Haines. "As a matter of fact he ceased marrying any couples, except those whom he knew or those known by his friends, way back in January. And even before that time there were pastors in this town who were officiating at more marriages than he was."

Mr. Haines said that the question had been settled long ago, and that he and the great majority of the congregation regarded the attacks, as a pretext to get Mr. McElmoyle. The three elders in question, although still retaining their positions in the church, did not attend the services yesterday and have not participated in activities of the congregation for a long time. It was said they are Henry M. McCullough, W. Sterling Evans and Dr. W. T. Morrison.

ENCOURAGEMENT "I hear young Bill-Dick Riggle is trying to spark your girl, Zanzalina," said a neighbor. "Does she encourage him any?" "Thunder, yes!" returned Gap Johnson, of Kumpus Ridge, Ark. "Why, tuther night when he was at my house, I sorter sauntered into the room, and seeing him there was reminded of a story of my own sparking days, which I pursued to tell. And right in the middle of the yarn Zanzalina up and told me if I didn't shut my mouth and tear out of there she'd slap it shut for me!" —Kansas City Star.

Penn State Has Great Record in World War State College, Pa.—Work on the official history of students and alumni of the Pennsylvania State College is now well under way. The book, compiled by the alumni secretary, E. N. Sullivan, and figures recently 3,800 show that approximately 3,800 were in some branch of the service during the war. The exact records will not be completed for some time, as the service data has been slow in coming in to the alumni office. When it is complete a volume of good size will be published that will be of great value to the college and all former students.

Of the total of 3,800, only sixty-five lost their lives in service. There were approximately 2,300 alumni and undergraduates who were in active service, and the S. A. T. C. division at the college last year totaled 1,500. About sixty per cent of the alumni of the college who were in the service held commissioned offices, considered to be a very high mark.

A summary of the records as they are arranged to date show that in the alumni quota there were two who held the rank of colonel; seven, lieutenant colonel; twenty-eight, major; ninety-eight, captain, and about 400, first or second lieutenant. There were hundreds of noncommissioned officers who were Penn State alumni or undergraduates. The two years of military training that every Penn State student is required to take in his undergraduate days is in many ways responsible for this excellent showing. There are now about 4,300 graduates of the college living, and over half of these were in some branch of the service, a figure in which the college takes great pride.

WAKING A NEBRASKA TOWN In the southwestern corner of the map of Nebraska, there's a little dot which indicates the town of Holdrege. Holdrege has some 3,000 people. But because it has also a commercial association that is really alive to the possibilities of the place, it has demonstrated to every one's satisfaction that just because a town is small it is not necessarily dead also.

Here's one of the stunts that helps make the town a better place to live in and one of the largest it is told by a Holdrege businessman in System.

The school teachers of this section of the state, comprising several counties, hold an annual convention. Two years ago we secured the convention for this town. The town auditorium was placed at the disposal of the association, which met for three days, the expenses incurred for the use of the building being met by the funds of the Commercial Club. One of the big things about this convention is the entertainment feature. It must be out of the usual—so high grade as to cause an attendance from miles about. So Gail Curel was invited to sing the cost of her coming being guaranteed by the Commercial Club, which was to be reimbursed by the receipts from her concert.

This picture contains a variety of reptiles and beasts that would compare favorably with those gathered in any zoo. A real lion, an alligator, a huge snake, warrens, porcupines, pet monkeys, dogs, canaries, kittens and elephants were engaged at the usual salary.

SHADOWED He was going home and it was getting dark. He rose from the station was a lonely one and he was getting along so fast as he could when he suddenly suspected that a man was following him. He went purposely. The faster he went the faster the man followed until they came to a cemetery.

"Now, he said to himself, 'I'll find out if he's after me,' and he entered the cemetery. The man followed him. Vague visions of revolutions and loaded clubs grew upon him. He closed a grave and his pursuer dodged after him. He made a detour of a family vault. Still the man was after him. At last he turned and faced the fellow.

"What do you want? What are you following me for?" "Well, sir, it's like this: I'm going up to Mr. Fitzbrown's house with a parcel and the porter at the station told me I followed you. I should find the place, as you live next door. Do you always go home like this?"—Houston Post.
