BERLIN SAYS PURSUIT ENEMY LED TO GAINS
 Claims Piercing of Rear Positions of Allies at Arzy and Grand Rozoy.

Berlin, via London, Friday, May 31.—"On the front from Noyon to the west of Rheims our attack is progressing favorably," says the German official communication issued this evening. The text of the communication follows:
 "There have been artillery duels of varying intensity and minor infantry engagements.
 "We have closely pursued the enemy retreating from the Allette front. South of Oise and across the Allette we captured the Bretigny-St. Paul Crosby-Lorre line.
 "North of the Aisne in constant fighting we drove the enemy back by way of Bieuzy-Chavigny.
 "To the south of Soissons the French brought forward cavalry and infantry for a violent counter attack. They were caught with disastrous effect by our fire and defeated.
 "We have crossed the Soissons-Hardenne road.
 "French divisions which were brought up in the direction of Pere-en-Tardenois from the southwest across the Marne and from the southeast were unable anywhere, in spite of their desperate counter attacks, to offer successful resistance to our advancing corps.
 "The rear positions of the enemy at Arzy and Grand Rozoy were pierced. To the south of Pere-en-Tardenois we reached the Marne. The heights of Sainte Gemme, Romigny, and Champolevy are in our possession.
 "On the southern bank of the Vesle, to the west of Rheims, Germigny, Geux and Thillois were captured.
 "The number of prisoners and booty are increasing continuously. More than 45,000 prisoners and more than 400 guns and thousands of machine guns have been taken."

AVONDALE SCHOOL WON THREE OF FIVE PRIZES
 In awarding the prizes on essays on Confederate generals at the Avondale graduating exercises Tuesday evening, Miss Nellie Sue Murray missed her prize at that time because Miss Sarah Frazier, president of Stewart chapter, U. D. C. Veterans, did not know to which school in the county Miss Murray belonged until after the awarding. This mistake shows Avondale school won three of the five prizes offered.

"HINDENBURG MAKING WESTERNERS OF US ALL"
 Says Military Writer—Operations in Holy Land and Garden of Eden Parts of Single Campaign.

(By F. H. Simonds.)
 (Copyright, 1918, The Tribune Association—The New York Tribune.)
 For the moment, at least, Hindenburg has made "westerners" of us all, despite the fact that he was the most confirmed of all the "easterners" until quite recently. But, granted that the world now recognizes that the future will be decided upon the battlefields of Picardy and Flanders and that the long debate between the two schools of thought, one seeking a decision in the east, the other in the west, must be adjourned, there still remains a measure of interest in the announcement that the Near-Eastern campaign of 1918 is at an end and that the arrival of the summer heat in Mesopotamia and Palestine has halted the British advance.
 These two operations, the one in the Holy Land, the other in the region of the Garden of Eden, are in reality but parts of a single campaign which has for its purpose defending Egypt and India by the occupation of Syria, as well as the upper reaches of the Euphrates and the middle course of the Tigris. Gen. Marshall, with his army based upon Bagdad, and Gen. Allenby, with his force based upon Jerusalem, are looking forward to the hour when they may meet at Aleppo, and if that hour does come the whole course of history in the Near East will be changed.

Of these three lines that to Mosul follows the trace of the old German line, which has been constructed northward from Bagdad part way to Mosul and westward from Mosul to nearly to the Cilician Gates. The general assumption is that since the war began the line has been completed from Scutari, opposite Constantinople, to Mosul, the German scheme of things the Bagdad railway was not merely to connect Constantinople with Bagdad and Basra, but it was also to serve as a highroad for Turkish advance both in Persia and into Russian Armenia, and for these uses it was necessary that it should go north from Aleppo and skirt the high ground of Asia Minor rather than go by the short and easy route from Aleppo across the narrow stretch of desert to the Euphrates.

But now that the British and not the Germans have Bagdad the scheme has been amended, and the British are steadily pushing a railway line along the Euphrates toward Aleppo by the short route from Aleppo through the mountains to the Mediterranean at the Gulf of Alexandretta. Beirut and Alexandretta are to be the bases of the new railroad route, with Basra on the river and Koweit on the Persian gulf as its eastern terminus. In this scheme the line up the Tigris to Mosul plays only a secondary part, it is useful as enabling the British to cover their flank; it may some day be the road by which British troops will reach and rescue the Armenians; but now it is important only as it leads away from Bagdad in the direction the Turkish thrust must come, if it is to come.
 Roughly speaking, the British have pushed up a hundred miles to the north toward Mosul, some fifty miles to the west toward Persia, and some 200 miles to the northwest toward Aleppo. But the Aleppo operation is the most important, and it is at Aleppo that the German commander-in-chief of the Turkish army has his headquarters. At Aleppo, some time in the distant future, the world travelers may change cars, leaving the train which brought them from Calais or Boulogne to take a train waiting in the Aleppo station, with India as its destination, or another which will carry them to Cape Town without change.
 But the advance of the British toward Aleppo by the Euphrates valley is conditioned upon the progress of the other British army, which has already passed Jerusalem and is moving north toward Aleppo with Damascus as its immediate objective. These two operations, that from Palestine and that from Mesopotamia, based the one on Egypt and the other on India, represent the two main thrusts of the British, for by these two thrusts Britain is seeking to change the whole situation in the Near East.
 Already the British armies, which have pushed up to and beyond Jerusalem have opened the way for a railroad between Cairo and Jerusalem, and you may go by train from the Nile almost to the Jordan, well beyond the Huleh City. Farther that way, pushing across the Jordan beyond Jericho, the British have cut the Hedjaz railroad, which bound Medina and Mecca with Damascus and Aleppo and enabled the Ottoman Turks to maintain the possession of the holy cities of the Mahometan world. Both these cities are in the possession of an Arab Asiatic provinces of Turkey.

 Other Possibilities.
 But, on the other hand, if Germany fails to win the war decisively, if she does not achieve a German peace, if she is compelled to accept a draw, although escaping a real defeat, then the British troops in Mesopotamia and Palestine will be guarantees against a speedy resumption by Germany of the effort to penetrate Asia Minor and Egypt. The troops now in the Near East will continue to mount guard against a new German foray and will still hold the Asiatic gates of the British empire. If the German threat to the British empire is not to be abolished by the defeat of Germany in this war, then it is of the utmost importance for Britain to hold the gates to her vital territories as strongly as possible, and Bagdad and Jerusalem are certainly outposts of India and Egypt. There remains the third possibility, the one we expect and hope for—the complete military defeat of Germany. In that case the campaigns in Syria and Mesopotamia will give Britain the possession of the keys of the near east and enable her, in accordance with her agreements with France, to bring to an end the hideous nightmare of Turkish rule in Syria and Mesopotamia. It may even open the way to the liberation of Armenia to the north, for from Mosul the road runs clear to Erzerum.

Syria, from Acre north, will fall to France; Aleppo, Damascus and Beirut will come under French protection if the allies are able to carry out their agreements. Palestine will be internationalized, its independence guaranteed by many nations, but it will, in any event, fall naturally under British influence. Mesopotamia will remain in British hands, while Persia, now that the Russians have abandoned their claims, will certainly drift under British influence. And for all these changes the British armies in the east have prepared the way. In the main, these armies are made up of native troops, although a few British divisions are still counted in the two armies.
 It is plain that no victory of Marshall or Allenby will affect the great decision which must come in the west.

U. S. VIRTUALLY ON WHEATLESS BASIS
 Food Officials Hopeful of 100 Per Cent. Response to Appeal for Conservation.
 Washington, June 1.—The United States will be on a virtual wheatless basis within the next thirty days by voluntary action. This was indicated today by food administration officials, who are hopeful of a 100 per cent. response to the appeal made to all members of fraternal organizations to abstain from wheat and wheat products for the next sixty days. The appeal, similar to one made through the churches last Sunday, has already produced a number of pledges.
 Herbert Hoover's appeal to fraternal organizations is the result of startling figures that show approximately one-third of the wheat normally consumed is available for the next two months. Macksburg, Ia., through Grand River lodge, No. 408, L. O. F., is the first to respond to the food administration appeal. It pledges all members to abstain from the use of wheat until September.
 Several months ago prominent labor men asked for a one month fast for all members of trade unions.
 This suggestion was not formally acted upon, it was said, on the ground that it was asking too much of many families whose children depended upon wheat to a large extent as a main article of food. It is believed, however, that in view of the wheat shortage, labor men will follow the example of fraternal organizations and pledge through their unions to abstain for the next sixty days.

Little Baby Suffers from Itching Eczema Healed by Cuticura
 "My baby was about eleven months old when eczema came on his face. It first came in red, rough-looking patches causing much discomfort and pain. It then came in little blisters and the skin was sore and red. The breaking out itched and burned and he could not sleep, and he scratched his face so that I had to tie his hands.
 "I tried several medicines but instead of being relieved he got worse, and it went on until he was two and a half years old. Then I sent for a free sample of Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used it for two weeks and his face was so much better that I purchased more, and one cake of Cuticura Soap with one half box of Cuticura Ointment completely healed him."
