BY CONTRAST

(EMMA BELL MILES)

The presentation of "The Birth of a Nation" at this time shows, by contrast, the wonderful progress made by the colored race, since their freedom from the influence of the carpetbaggers in the dark days of reconstruction.

The Children of the Ghetto were penned in fetid holes; They were filthy, long-nosed vermin; they hadn't any souls; They were stoned and taxed and tortured; the pogroni to this hour Refuses bare existence to the Jew within its power.

Yet if need perplexed the merchant or menaced a spendthrift king, Then Hebrew thrift and culture were quite another thing. Or if war's own sinews slackened, if the army's strength was spent, A man and brother Israel became at ten per cent.

The Female of the Species through countless patient years Drudged for her lord and master and was scolded for her tears; She wasn't to be trusted, without character or brain, To take a part in ordering his world, his own domain.

Nay, more: the noblest prince, in want of sons to bear his name, Must needs ask help of woman, and must guard his house from shame.

Hence Lady this, Senora that, and Donna, if you please; Hats off in elevators, and the gallant-chivalry wheeze. And below are all the Fallen, and the Ruined, and the Lost, Who bore without due sanction, and must even pay the cost.

Now War re-values manhood, teaching us to guard The Source, So the nameless come-by-chance-child is a hero's son, of course; The woman who has fallen stands erect and stands alone, And every little woodcock has a status all his own.

While we cheer the Red Cross nurses and the mothers near and far, And every girl in overalls is helping win the war, And it's Have a vote, dear comrade, and a salary while you wait, And anything you fancy, with regards from your friend, the State.

Last week in White Oak stockade a nigger was flogged to death; And down in our back alleys black babies gasp for breath; They breed in stench and fever, they are harried without cause, Their portion, vice and ignorance, is paid them by the laws.

But the Negro troops are marching and it stirs the Negro soul, For the black skin hides a red, red heart when drums begin to roll; And firm black feet are climbing out of age-old pits of wrong: Two races' crimes are silenced by one glorious battle-song!

Oh, red is the dawn in breaking, and black is the night behind, And a thunder of iron murder rolls down on the bitter wind, And dim is the light and cloudy whereby we strive and grope Each toward a stumbling brother, for in union is our hope; We must cling and climb together, out of the ancient night, Thrill to a common danger, thrilled by an equal Right.

The one-time Yellow Peril, the Indian robbed of his lands, The Woman and the Laborer, we all are joining hands, Saving the world in struggle from its barren bloody way, That God and man together may walk in the cool of the day. Clouds of error and of hatred end blank as they began, And each of the stranger faces is the face of the Son of Man! Man—it is Man who listens for the coming of the Word, Somewhere, somewhere—to enter into the joy of his Lord!
