Mill officials estimated the number on strike at between 2,000 and 4,000. The mills will open again

SCHOOL FOR SHIPBUILDING TRADES ESTABLISHED

Twenty-five Men Enter From Shipbuilding Plants on Coast From Pensacola to Orange Enrolled. (Associated Press.) Mobile, Ala., July 2.—The government school for teaching the different trades of shipbuilding was opened here last night at the yards of the Mobile Shipbuilding company with about twenty-five men from shipbuilding plants located along the gulf coast from Pensacola to Orange, Tex., attending.

A. H. Morrison, who was recently appointed by the emergency fleet corporation to take charge of the school, stated that the attendance will probably be much larger within a few days, after the work gets well under way. All shipbuilding yards of this section are allowed to send a certain number of men from their plants here to the school, where they are given instructions on how to teach the shipbuilding trades, after which they return to their respective yards and become instructors at these plants of the inexperienced men.

WHEN MILLIONS ARE TORN INTO BLOODY FRAGMENTS

The Experienced Eye Must See That One Side May Gain Victory but Neither Can Win. Amsterdam, July 2.—Discussing sympathetically in the Berlin Tageblatt the recent pamphlet written by Viscount Grey on "The League of Nations," Gen. Count Max Montenucci says that the only way worth the immense sacrifices involved is the prevention for all time of a repetition of the four years of terror which the world is experiencing. "Of one thing I am certain," he continued, "and that is that many of those who went out in August, 1914, with imperialistic desires have been taught to realize that the power and welfare of the nation are not increased when millions of its subjects are torn into bloody fragments or subjected to shells; when billions of its national fortune are destroyed or wasted on the work of destruction; when the birth rate falls, and when death and crime steadily increase. Even the inexperienced eye must see that in war such as it has become in our time one side may indeed gain victories, but neither can win."

SPEECH INTENDED FOR EAR OF ALLIES

London Times Says Von Kuehlmann Meant Germany Could Fight on Indefinitely.

London.—The Times says it understands that government circles here regard Foreign Minister Von Kuehlmann's speech as largely directed to foreign countries, particularly to this country. He wished, it is believed, to encourage those inclined to be faint-hearted to believe, first, that they could get tolerable terms out of him, secondly, that otherwise the war would go on indefinitely in view of Germany's great resources. His object was to say, "I am not going to threaten that you will be beaten, but the war will go on indefinitely unless we can come to terms."

He suggested that the war-weary could have peace on terms they might consider tolerably satisfactory. He said, in effect, "We have made great acquisitions in the war. It is noteworthy that Von Kuehlmann treated Courland and Lithuania as no longer matters of external politics. His three fundamental requirements were, first, historic boundaries—what other political elements, secondly, befitting colonial possessions, and thirdly, freedom of the seas. All these phrases, it is pointed out, are capable of being made to mean almost anything. The most puzzling is the "freedom of the seas" phrase, but probably, it is regarded here, Von Kuehlmann meant freedom to import raw material. He is so anxious about this that he does not want to call attention to the extent of his anxiety. Any German speaker is in the same position now, not daring to be moderate because of fear of Pan-German anger, and not daring to be out and out Pan-German for fear of other political elements. All such wavering would vanish. There would be a complete revival of the Pan-German doctrine. Nothing in Von Kuehlmann's speech could be quoted against the extreme policies of the Pan-Germans.

The reference to Belgium in his speech is interpreted as meaning that he hopes to keep Belgium if he can. The stories of differences between Von Kuehlmann and Chancellor Von Hertling are probably unfounded. If there is anything at all in them, the differences probably are only parliamentary. The Times correspondent at The Hague says: "The most important thing about Von Kuehlmann's first speech in the reichstag is that it was drafted after consultation with British headquarters and the Kaiser, who both knew and approved its contents literally, as indeed did Chancellor Von Hertling also."

Allies Guarding The Way to Paris

(By Joseph W. Grigg.) (Copyright, 1918, by the New York World.)

British Headquarters in France—the great battle has not been precipitated yet. But the enemy continues to perfect his organization, and the allies leave nothing undone to meet his next and possibly his greatest effort of the war. The enemy is painting propaganda pictures for the neutrals of the allies' treacherous forces cringing before the menace of his powerful blows. It did not do him wise to believe in ferocity with which he undoubtedly will launch his next battle, but what animates the allies is a quiet, resolute confidence based on the determination not to give ground except on a frightful cost and to bar the roads to Paris and to the coast. There are many who believe the Germans' next blow will develop into a surprise attack, but these objectives, if the enemy is hastening to complete his organization and to use his greatest possible striking force at the greatest possible speed, so the allies are developing their resources to meet it. This development now includes Americans in formidable numbers. While the directing forces of both armies watch with hawklike vigilance, there are some pictures of the men themselves on this front which are prophetic of German defeat, regardless of the length of the world's struggle. The Canadians and Americans in sound of the guns still have a fiery zeal for baseball. The Germans must bear the cheering of the wildly enthusiastic fans when a home run is made. The British Tommies keenly toil to gain supremacy at cricket as soon as they get a respite from holding sections of the trenches. In the ever growing spirit of camaraderie between Americans and Britons nothing is better than the love of sports in impelling both.

FOE'S BIG LOSSES IN AIR

While there have been raids and counter raids, there has been only infantry development. Last week, in the six weeks preceding, there was some weather propitious enough to fly the Germans in and from the air. Never before has the enemy taken so many precautions to meet the British air "aces" according to his own soldiers, and presumably for excellent reasons, as the British have dropped over a thousand tons of bombs in the last two months. The German aeroplane losses likewise indicate a desperate but ineffectual defensive air policy, for in same two months he has lost approximately 700 machines, or fully seven times the number of British planes missing. Either because the shortage of horses makes it necessary or he is hoping to obtain more speed, the enemy is extensively using motor trucks running on rails. CHECKS FOR ALLOWMENTS ARE SPEEDIED BY NEW SYSTEM

GHECKS FOR ALLOWMENTS ARE SPEEDIED BY NEW SYSTEM

Washington, July 2.—Delivery of government checks covering allowances and allowances to the dependents of soldiers and sailors has been speeded up by the inauguration of a new system by the bureau of war-risk insurance, under amendments to the war-risk insurance law recently enacted by congress. Allowments, heretofore on a sliding scale according to the pay of the soldier and the number and personnel of his family, will be for a fixed sum. In the future every enlisted man must make a compulsory allotment to his wife and children of $15 a month. To this the government will add a monthly allowance ranging from $5 for a motherless child and $15 a month for a wife without children up to a maximum of $36. The enlisted man, if he desires government allowances for his dependent parents, grandparents, grandchildren, brothers and sisters, may make allotments to them of $5 a month, where allotment is made to wife and children, and $15 where no such allotment is made. By the handling of only two amounts, $15 and $36, the work of sending out the checks is simplified and facilitated.
