SCOTLAND NECK. The Primitive Baptists--The Excommunicates.

(Correspondence to the Richmond Dispatch.)

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., January 16, 1889. To-day has been set apart as the jubilee of fasting and prayer by the Jubilee Association of the Primitive Baptist Church.

The occasion includes several counties in Eastern Carolina, and the day will be observed by every church in it.

The colored people of this community are still in a state of confusion over the question of emigration. A letter from a resident in Texas has recently been received from Edgewood county, N. C., attracting attention.

She writes to her father that she gets $25 a month for her services, and she also produces a bale and a half to the acre. The colored people think $24 a month is an independent salary.

All sorts of things are told them concerning their pay. An agent at this place recently told them that they could be paid three times as much for their work in Texas as he can here.

THE FEVER IS SOLE. The inclination to emigrate is by no means uniform. Here and there they leave, and quite as many more say they are going to stay here. Some who have absolutely no money say they will remain here, and then one who has his own "forty acres and a mule" folds his tent and goes away.

There is a strong feeling here that the colored people themselves as to whether or not any considerable number will leave. This immediate community says that one more week will decide it.
