The Veto Message—Again.

No one can read carefully the President's message vetoing the seigniorage bill without perceiving that it caused him much regret to be compelled by his sense of public duty to differ in opinion with the friends of that measure.

Mr. Hornblower Boasts. In an address delivered in New York last Monday, Mr. W. H. Hornblower said:

"I am a strong party man, but above all I am an American, and I believe that there are times when party revolution is not only just, but necessary, and that the wisest partisanship, if this be party treason, let my enemies make the most of it."

Such a time came, Mr. Hornblower thinks, when the United States declined to confirm his nomination to the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States.

"Do men like to be flattered?" is the subject of discussion in some papers up North.

We move that a jury of newspaper men be appointed to settle the dispute.

Or better still, a jury of women, we would suggest.

South Carolina's pensions to Confederate soldiers and widows this year will be $22 each, or less than $2 per month.

form and economy in every direction—begin to talk about the "expense" of a convention. Certainly to hold a convention would cost money, but it should not cost more than $75,000, and if it could not draft a constitution which would save this sum to the State in one single year, its members should hide themselves from public view ever afterwards.

Whenever we come to reform our governmental system with a view to economy, we will be bound to consider if it be not possible to abolish the fee system and pay all—or nearly all—of our public officers by fixed salaries.

All things point to the holding of a constitutional convention in Virginia before very long. There are a dozen reasons why a convention should be held; but its advocates are full-handed enough if they ask that it be called for the one purpose of amending our constitution so as to rid our taxpayers of the enormous burden of useless expenses now heaped upon all the counties and cities of the Commonwealth.

Crisp Declines the Senatorship. Speaker Crisp has enrolled his name among the few if not immortal names of persons who have declined senatorships.

The probability is that Mr. Crisp will be a candidate for the full senatorial term, but quit his post in the House now he will not do. We judge that his resolution to stick to his present position will make him an almost inevitable candidate when his name is presented to the Legislature; but he must take his chances as to that.

Mr. Crisp has done the right thing. The Legislature now pending in Congress is of more importance than any that has been proposed since reconstruction days, and so far as the House is concerned, there is no other hand which can guide our party so safely as Mr. Crisp's. So, we feel thankful that he has taken the course that he has.

Mr. Crisp would have been a senatorial seat. Governor Northern deserves praise for choosing Mr. Crisp as his appointee.

Months ago the Dispatch in an editorial article urged that Herriot county should have a well-organized police force, and we are glad that steps in that direction are now being taken.

Herriot county is a police-force almost as much as Richmond does, and it is thickly populated around this city, and despatches go from here there whenever they do not wish to be too closely eyed by our police.

When every good citizen and tax-payer takes an active interest in securing good government, then good government will come, but not before, and all attempts to reach a political millennium by any other route than this simple and straight forward path will fail.

Father of Twenty-Nine Children. Rev. A. Routh, of Piney Flats, Va., has written a letter to the Bristol Courier, in which he says:

"As various and erroneous reports about myself and my family have been going the rounds in papers of late, I hope you will give me space in the Courier to give a true version of the case, not that I am offended at those who have said reports to the papers, for they write very kindly about me, and of course they thought they were giving a correct version of the case. I am 75 years old, have been married three times, and we have had twenty-nine children—twelve sons and seventeen daughters, and have all died in infancy, except one. So I have eighteen living children with us. I have been actively engaged in the ministry forty-five years, and have all the time been greatly blessed in my labors. I am able to travel on horseback, and can preach with as much ease as I could fifteen years ago. In conclusion, let me say what very few men of my age can say: I have never owned a gun or pistol in my life, never had a lawsuit of any kind, never had but one fight, and that was when I was a boy, and my father gave me a dogging for it, and I concluded to quit the business."

These two were up to their standard, but the others—and there were many—were all faintly in some particular. Those which might have claimed originality were grotesque; a few were indecent.

Afterwards came days of inspection, and of study of the pictures. The opportunity of comparing national traits in design and style was not so good as might have been desired. There was no apparent in detail and handling were not so apparent as in the paintings of "The Angelus," which were both marked and amusing. It was pleasant to observe the patriotism of the artists—how they made their beautiful art the handmaid of history—in other words, how a picture can be as preservative of a hero or a heroic deed as an epic.

American art has its characteristic features. The national impress is strong upon it. In both the subjects selected and the manner of treatment, our painters have generally been true to their country and their nationality.

In "Famous Paintings of the World," now offered to Dispatch readers, are splendid reproductions by the perfected halftone process of great paintings exhibited at the World's Columbian Exposition.

This portfolio series does not, however, consist wholly of subjects which had place on the walls of the magnificent apartments in the Art Building in Jackson Park. We believe that the average quality of paintings reproduced in "Famous Paintings of the World" is higher than the average quality of art exhibited at Chicago. The Portfolio Series here referred to is worthy of the consideration of all our readers who appreciate the beautiful and the truly artistic.

Colonel George E. Waring, Jr., one of the most eminent sanitary engineers of this country, has an exhaustive article in the April issue of the Century Magazine on the disposal of sewage. He describes the different processes that have been tried in this country and in Europe, and declares that the only one that gives satisfaction, and seems a perfect solution of the problem, is disposal by irrigation or filtration. In this connection he commends highly the system that is carried out at Wayne, Pa., where the sewage is so disposed of that it is no menace to the health, and is attended by no unpleasant features.

They End this way—the names of most so-called washing compounds. And it isn't an accident, either. It's to make them sound something like Pearline. That is the original washing compound—the first and in every way the best. These imitations are thus named in the hope of confusing you—in the hope that you'll mistake them for Pearline. For most people, that ought to be enough. It ought to convince them that the article so imitated, so copied, so looked-up to, is the one that is the best to use.
