did not chide Mr. Warren at that time for his alleged ill-treatment. He understood that he had authority, and in his anxiety to catch the man had issued a "bunglesome" warrant. "I wanted to catch him, and I would have done so, but for the Mayor."

QUESTIONS BY THE MAYOR.

Other questions followed one after another, and at last the Mayor remarked: "You have been trying hard to get me to understand that I intend to get you to try Mr. McCarthy's warrant. You are to investigate the whole matter," replied Mr. Gordon. "We are not here to try anybody. If I am right I intend to get close to the line and let the chips fall where they will. I don't understand that they will fall."

A LIVELY COLLOQUY.

Then followed a colloquy between the Mayor and Mr. Gordon. Mr. Gordon: "You are to investigate the defalcation of Cecil L. Epps." Mr. Mayor: "Under that resolution," said Mr. Gordon, "if we find anything more than one or more to report to this finding."

Mr. Gordon: "What object is there in keeping two men at the station house?"

Mr. Mayor: "I just told you I saw only two men at the station, and I didn't want to take them from the station house." Mr. Gordon: "What object is there in keeping two men at the station house? Isn't it the duty of having some one to send out on calls of this character?"

Mr. Mayor: "I suppose so."

Mr. Gordon: "Is it likely there would have been a more important call than the one that you made to get away from the station?" Mr. Mayor: "He had since 10 o'clock (and turning). He's trying to make out that I'm responsible."

Mr. Gordon: "What object is there in issuing it at once?"

Mr. Mayor: "I issued the warrant at once." Mr. Gordon: "Did you issue the warrant at once?" Mr. Mayor: "I did so as soon as I could," said the Mayor.

Mr. Mayor: "Did you not president?"

Mr. McCarthy: "When you met Sergeant Wren yesterday you testified you said nothing about the matter to him?"

INTERVIEW WITH STARKE.

Mr. McCarthy: Do you remember having had an interview in the night time with Mr. Starke? The Mayor: I did, sir, at my residence. Mr. McCarthy: What did you talk about?

MEANT NO DISRESPECT.

Mr. Cardozo was the next witness. He stated that the Mayor had said in conversation with him that he "didn't mean any disrespect to you, gentlemen."

Mr. Gordon: "What object is there in keeping two men at the station house?"
