DAVIS AND LINCOLN

The South should build a magnificent monument to Mr. Davis, but it finds no fault with the fact that Lincoln men are erecting one in his honor. They commemorate a great man—a man who would doubtless have prosecuted the South through the horrors of Reconstruction if he had not been admiring Mr. Lincoln. The South approves the career of Mr. Davis. Southern people honor the noble career of the nation that had the good fortune to have a man like Davis for its president.
