THE BATTLE OF GREAT LUSTRE

An Incident in Chancellorsville Campaign and What Grew Out of It. OPERATIONS OF CAVALRY. The Story of General Averell's Interview With a Confederate Prisoner Retold.

No battle, probably, in which the Federal and Confederate armies were engaged reflected more lustre on Southern generalship and the valor of the Southern soldiers than the bloody struggle of Chancellorsville.

General Averell's interview with a Confederate prisoner retold. The prisoner, a member of the 13th Virginia Cavalry, described the operations of the cavalry during the battle.

Roll of Company E, Thirteenth Virginia Cavalry. Captain, Junius A. Goodwyn. First Lieutenant, J. G. Geo. Second Lieutenant, Z. C. Grissom.

General Averell's command consisted of the 13th Cavalry, the 11th Cavalry, and the 12th Cavalry. The 13th Cavalry was the main body of the force.

Plants have mysterious methods of migration. Rambling over the downs in late summer or autumn, you may often see the short, smooth turf velled with a soft, moving mat.

Washington. A Spectacle. Representatives of the Railroads Passing an Anti-Railroad Bill—How the System Works in Congress—No Bribery—No Scenes—But it's a Big Business System.

By LINCOLN STEFFENS.

WASHINGTON, March 1.—Some critics have been complaining that these letters are moving too swiftly toward conclusions; others that they go too slow.

CRACKING OF THE PODS. As you wander by the crumpled furze and broom in August and September a little sharp crackle crackle resounds on every side.

Crane's bills, or native wild geraniums, adopt the principle of the sling. You can illustrate the method thus: Hold a stone in each hand, the arms being held down to the sides.

Now, in "Uncle Joe's" great State in the good old days before the reformers went "too far" and "hurt business."

Take the rate bill, which we have followed through the House. Maybe it should be defeated; maybe it is bad to let a government commission fix the prices of transportation.

There was a liberty. Liberty for whom? For Lucius Tuttle. Mr. McCall talked as though he would rather see a railroad than a man.

Some plants prefer to do their traveling by sea. If they are good sailors—that is, if they float and stand long immersion in salt water—this is a very effective way of reaching the ends of the earth.

Editor Times-Dispatch: Sir—Referring to statement in a recent issue of your paper, that the battleship of the 13th Va. Cavalry, captured at Poolville, Md., in 1862, had been returned to the state.

not do) those gentlemen were speaking in defense of that business which is one of the sources of the corruption of the men and of the government of at least one of the New England States.

But we are not a high business. And we should be above business. I can hear the good business man exclaim "Why?"

friends of the Senate complain. I don't blame you and me. The majority of the Interstate Commerce Commission sent here by our legislatures to represent us here, is not the public opinion of the State, but the public opinion of the railroads.

Discouraged. "Do you think you will make a farmer of your son?" "I'm afraid not," answered Mr. Cornwell. "He spends too much time reading about agriculture in the encyclopedia."
