

I VENS DIES FOR MURDER OF WOMAN

Slayer of Mrs. Hollister Goes to Gallows Unable to Utter Prayer.

WAS ON VERGE OF COLLAPSE

Sentence Carried Into Effect on Date Originally Fixed by Court.

(By Associated Press.) CHICAGO, June 22.—Richard Ivens was hanged here to-day for the murder of Mrs. Besse Hollister.

Ivens' victim was the wife of Franklin C. Hollister, head of the large printing establishment of Hollister Brothers. The crime was committed on the evening of January 12, of this year.

Mrs. Hollister, who was a handsome woman, and prominent in both church and social circles, left her home with the intention of carrying some flowers to the funeral of a friend. She did not appear at the funeral, nor was she again seen alive, by any of her friends.

The following day Richard Ivens reported to his father that the body of a woman was lying in the rear of their barn. The elder Ivens informed the police and the body was identified as that of Mrs. Hollister. The clothing of the victim was torn and she had evidently been strangled to death.

Made Full Confession. Ivens was charged with the crime. He at first denied his guilt, but later made a full confession. He went into shocking details of the crime in a cold-blooded fashion that aroused intense popular indignation. When arraigned for trial Ivens claimed that he had been forced to confess by the police.

Application to the Supreme Court for a stay of proceedings and to the Governor and the Board of Pardons was in vain and his sentence was carried into effect on the date originally set.

Just before the cap was drawn over his face Ivens attempted to utter a prayer, but although his lips moved convulsively, his voice would not respond, and he was not able to utter a sound. It was evident that he was in a state of collapse, and the sheriff therefore hastened the last details as much as possible.

Woodwood, H. F. Farrar, W. S. Copeland, Edward Donaldson, A. J. Oakley, J. O. Scott, A. R. Holliday, G. W. Leake, H. F. Ratcliffe, John D. Waldrop, A. L. Hilliard, J. H. Babch, C. B. Fourqurean, J. P. Fourqurean and George E. Booth.

FACULTY OPPOSE PRESENT PLAN

(Continued from First Page.) was not definite, for the whole matter rests in the hands of the board of trustees, who will meet shortly and pass upon the question.

From the Other Side.

A member of the faculty of the University College of Medicine, who voted against amalgamation, said last night: "I am not opposed to amalgamation, but I do not believe that it is expedient at this time. We should not rush hastily into this matter. I think we would get better results by waiting two years. If we combine our income will be greatly reduced, while our expenses will remain practically the same. Besides, the amalgamation would make us a State institution, and it is well known that State institutions do not get endowments. We need endowments for our hospitals, and we cannot get on without them."

STUDENT CONFERENCE OPENS AT NORTHFIELD

Feature Will Be Series of Lectures on American Civic Problems.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) EAST NORTHFIELD, MASS., June 22.—The twenty-first annual student conference, representing the colleges and preparatory schools in the Eastern United States and Canada, opened here to-night with a mass meeting in the Auditorium. Most of the men, who have been arriving in swarms yesterday and to-day, are quartered in the Northfield Seminary buildings; others are at Camp Northfield, while still others are at Hotel Northfield, which is usually full at this time with friends and relatives of the delegates. No estimate can yet be made of the number present, but from the early opening of the gathering, it is believed that it will be one of the largest on record.

Real work will begin to-morrow, both on the religious and social side of the gathering. The daily Bible classes, consisting of courses under Prof. L. H. Miller, of Princeton; Prof. R. A. Falconer, of Halifax; Mr. R. S. Smith, of Yale; Rev. H. E. Fosdick, and W. D. Murray, of New York, and Dr. A. G. Leacock, of Phillips Exeter, will be continued to-morrow, and the schedules for the intercollegiate baseball series, tennis and golf tournaments will also be arranged.

The annual patriotic celebration and field day, which usually comes July 4th, will be held next Wednesday, June 27th. This day marks the zenith of the assembly and is one of the most delightful celebrations held at Northfield the entire summer.

A new and important department for the conference this year will be a series of daily lectures on "American Civic Problems," by John Willis Baer, of New York City, who will lecture on "Immigration," and by Roswell Bates, also of New York, who will speak on "The City Problems." Other speakers scheduled are Mr. Robert E. Speer, Rev. Endicott Peabody, D. D., Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, Dr. S. M. Zwemer, Rt. Rev. C. P. Anderson, Rev. J. Ross Stevenson, D. D., Prof. A. A. Falconer, Rev. H. E. Fosdick, Dr. Edward L. Bosworth, Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, D. D.

The gathering will continue until July 1st, and before that time it is expected that between 15 and 16 schools will have their representatives here.

Our Proneness to Exaggerate.

Professor Brander Matthews, the chairman of Mr. Carnegie's movement toward the simplification of spelling, was talking recently about exaggeration. "We are too prone to exaggerate," he said. "We exaggerate in our advertisements. We exaggerate in our trademarks and labels. It is a 90-horse-power engine really as strong as 90 horses." Professor Matthews laughed.

"I entered one night," he resumed, "the study of a friend of mine. He sat at his desk writing. An electric fan on the desk top gave a fair light and beside it burned a large wax candle. "Why are you burning that candle there?" I asked.

"Well, said my friend, I know the electric light is 16 candles, but you've no idea what a difference the seventeenth makes."

KING AND QUEEN CROWNED IN ANCIENT CAPITAL OF NORWAY

KING OF NORWAY, QUEEN MAUD AND THEIR CHILDREN.

The ceremony throughout was impressive. When the newly-crowned sovereign returned to their thrones, after the Episcopal benediction, all the royal guests and special ambassadors saluted them with deep reverences.

Crown Too Large.

Nothing occurred throughout the ceremony to cause the principal participants the slightest uneasiness. The King, with soldierly mien, marched erect and without a smile through the long choir and to the throne before the altar in the apse. He was thoroughly composed throughout. The crown, though reduced in size since it was used by King Oscar, proved too large for King Haakon, and failed to confer dignity on the monarch, but he maintained his composure, despite the fact that the crown threatened to fall over his ears.

Queen Maud looked attractive in her royal robes and diamond collar. She bowed graciously on either side when she advanced to the throne to receive her crown. The Queen and her ladies-in-waiting were simply dressed. There were no court trains and they had no feathers in their hair. There were few elaborate toilettes among the audience.

Grouped around the King's throne during the ceremony were the Crown Prince and Crown Princess Christian of Denmark, Prince Harold of Denmark and Prince Henry of Prussia, while about the Queen's throne were the Prince and Princess of Wales, Princess Victoria of England and Grand Duke Michael of Russia.

Crowds Cheered Lustily.

On their return to the palace the King and Queen received the congratulations of a deputation from the Storting and the members of the government. Later the vast throng outside the palace broke out into hearty cheering in response to their Majesties' appearance at a window, still wearing their coronation robes.

Besides the special embassy from the United States, and Mr. and Mrs. William J. Bryan, the Americans present included Messrs. Marshall Field and Eddy, and Miss Eddy, of Chicago; William Wheatley and wife, Mrs. E. Hope Slinger, and Miss Gwynn, of Washington, and the Norwegian-American delegation. King Haakon presented special Ambassador Graves and Mrs. Graves with silver medals struck in honor of the coronation.

At the state dinner at the palace to-night there were 350 guests, including all the visiting princes and princesses and members of the special embassies and legations.

The Ancient Capital.

Trondhjem, the ancient capital of the kings of Norway, may be called the cradle of the Norse nation. It is first mentioned in history, before there was any legend in connection with Harold the Fair Haired, who conquered all the petty kingdoms of the Norse country and united them into a single State under his own crown in the latter part of the ninth century. But it did not attain first importance in the kingdom until Haakon the Good was crowned there in 935 amid the joyful acclamations of the people who had successfully rebelled against the cruel tyranny of Eric Blood-Axe and his despotic wife, Queen Gunhild. Since then all the kings of Norway, of whatever nationality they might be, have had to travel to this far-away city for the ceremony of investiture. The King Haakon of to-day owes his name to the first good King of a united and independent Norway and the little Crown Prince becomes the namesake of his first legitimate successor, the great Olaf Trygvesson, who was crowned in 995. Up to that time Trondhjem was less a national capital than the mere stronghold of an important province, but in 995 Olaf Trygvesson laid the foundation of the present city, which he then called Nidaros. It is the northernmost town of any importance in Europe, being situated in the same latitude as the south coast of Iceland, but it has a strangely temperate climate. While in the southern part of Norway become solidly frozen during the winter, the river Nidaros rarely freezes over and the beautiful Trondhjem Fjord never. The climate is like that of middle Germany in winter and much like that of the coast of Oregon in summer. Hence the luxuriant vegetation and the resultant prosperity of the people.

Haakon the Good.

King Haakon the Good is distinguished as being the first Christian sovereign of Norway. He was sent by his father to England in his childhood and here he became a convert to the faith and was baptized. Upon his return to Norway and his accession to his father's throne he did not dare to immediately attack the ancient Ase faith, which had so many fanatical adherents among his closest friends, so he temporized for some sixteen years or more until he had won such unbounded popularity as seemed to warrant his taking steps toward the realization of the wish nearest his heart—the Christianization of his people. He began well, but he did not possess the cruelty of resolution necessary for the accomplishment of such a task in that age, so he only succeeded in opening the way for his more vigorous successor, Olaf Trygvesson, who introduced the fire and sword into the fight with a great measure of success. But even he failed to completely eradicate paganism from the national heart, and it was only after his successor, by his wife, and more particularly by his daughter, had appealed to the ready imagination of the Norsemen, that Christianity really became the established religion of the country. This great missionary was King Olaf Haraldson, who was afterward canonized as St. Olaf, and over whose sacred remains the great cathedral of Trondhjem, one of the noblest in the world, is the proudest historical monument in Norway and the finest church in all Scandinavia. St. Olaf was killed at the religious battle of Stiklestad in 1030, and his son and successor, Magnus the Good, brought his body to Trondhjem and placed it in a magnificent sarcophagus on the high altar of St. Clement's Church, where it became an object of devout pilgrimage from all over the country. Eventually the cathedral and some fifteen or twenty other churches were built upon the strength of the faith he had created, and even today Trondhjem to-day his name is revered above all others. In 1511 Trondhjem was included into a new province and a new impetus was given to ecclesiastical building enterprise. At this time the great Archbishop Eystein, a devoted friend of the crown, called the king and fled to England, where he remained for three years. He returned full of religious zeal and ambitious of the attainment of the highest ecclesiastical honors, and during the next few years he built the present transept of the cathedral, a graceful central tower, and the choir. Eystein died in 1523, and the choir was not completed until 1601, and it is a matter of great regret to the Norwegians that the restoration is completed, but the sum of 300,000 kroner per annum being provided by the State.

No Royal Palace.

There is no royal palace in Trondhjem, and during the coronation festivities the royal family will use the residence of the sitting minister, the Governor of the province. This stands in the center of the city near the great Market Place, where the people gather daily in a picturesque throng to buy and sell the produce of the country and the fjord. The town in ordinary times is really little more than a fishing village, although it does contain 85,000 inhabitants. The chief industry of the place is salmon fishing, and salmon is the principal article of export. The fish is dried and the dried fish is probably the finest in the world. The least particular traveler is liable to lose his appetite if he does not get a good breakfast, lunch, dinner and supper, and between meals if he should happen to be hungry. The town where it lugs the same scene will indeed be worth the long voyage that must be made up through the North Sea to Trondhjem.

RICH MISERS WHO LIVED DOGS' LIVES. It may be that Uncle Russell Sano is a miser. He has that reputation, but compared with some rich men he is a spendthrift. A few weeks ago Samuel Dunlay died in England. He had several millions and in forty years had purchased one suit of clothes, a cheap pair of trousers, two overcoats, and in sixteen years four straw hats were the only head coverings. He would not have his shoes blacked for fear of wearing out, and his housekeeper cut his hair. Russian millionaire, Solodovnikov, left millions for charity when he died. He had lived alone for years, living little better than a dog. He was ragged and miserly.

Teach Them to Write English.

What percentage of the young men and women who are being graduated from high schools, academies and colleges this month knows how to use the English language accurately and effectively? The proportion is very small. Examination of the graduating addresses discloses a literary style which, as a rule, is loose, stilted and laborious and which lacks precision, conciseness and vitality. Mastery of the English language is more a necessity than an art that should be cultivated and not lost. Ability to employ words correctly, interestingly and forcefully is an essential and helpful weapon in the armory of a young man's equipment, but we suppose that hardly one graduate in a hundred knows how to handle the weapon to advantage. The usefulness of American educational institutions would be increased if students were more successful in the study of the skillfully jockeying words—Hartford Times.
