A general meeting of the committees will be held at the Chamber of Commerce assembly-room at 8:15 o'clock to-morrow night, and it is confidently believed they will then report the full amount raised.

Two Years of President Roosevelt. In recounting the successes and failures of Mr. Roosevelt in the two years of his service as an elected President, the following things need to be taken into the account.

(1) In a large degree the radicalism with which the President has been charged has been thrust upon him by forces which not only shaped themselves independently of his will, but were the result of an operation long before he entered office.

(2) His aim has been to go only far enough to meet the necessities of the situation, to head off the radicals who would go much farther than they were elected, and who, as he feared, would probably be elected if he failed to act.

(3) With his natural impetuosity and his zeal to correct evils, and also to avenge wrongs, he has, in some instances, gone farther than he intended to correct them.

Although the United States has only five per cent of the world's population, she is producing in 1907 fully twenty-five per cent of the world's gold, thirty per cent of its silver, forty per cent of its iron, forty-two per cent of its steel, forty-five per cent of its coal, fifty per cent of its petroleum, sixty per cent of its cotton, and seventy-five per cent of its cotton.

Between the election of Harrison, in 1888, and the completion of the first term of Roosevelt's present term on March 4, 1907, the wealth of the United States has doubled. More than $1 billion has been added to the United States' total since Roosevelt entered office in September, 1901, than was in the country as a result of the accumulations of all the presidencies at the time of Lincoln's inauguration in 1861.

The value of the United States' property in the United States to-day is greater than that of the United Kingdom and France combined, while the second highest nation in the world, Germany, is only one-tenth as rich as the United States.

Naturally this stupendous expansion in the country's interests and activities in the past few years has brought
