LAKE OF BURNING OIL LIGHTS UP FOR MILES

Immense Gusher in Mexican Fields Sends Belching Flames High Into the Air and the Blaze Visible for 100 Miles.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) CITY OF MEXICO, July 29.—Belching flames hundreds of feet into the air, so high that they are plainly visible seventy-five or 100 miles away, a “gusher” of oil well belonging to the Pennsylvania Oil Company, at Dos Bocas is on fire, and is costing the company at least $55,000 per day every day that it burns.

The well has a daily flow of 15,000 barrels, and the flames from the burning are lighting the whole country for many miles. It is claimed that newspapers can be read in some sections by the light at a distance of ten miles.

The well, which was one that the company recently brought in, ignited from the boiler of their plant, on July 4th, and despite the strenuous efforts which the company has been making since that time to extinguish it and bring the well under control, has been burning steadily at an enormous financial loss.

Ships passing along the Atlantic coast report the flames as plainly visible at a distance of eighty miles or more from the well, while at Furber, one hundred and thirty-five kilometers from the burning lake, the fire can be clearly seen. Furber is another oil field, and is located in an exceedingly mountainous and heavily wooded section of the country, and the fact that the burning well can be plainly seen from this place, despite the hills and the woods, is significant of the great heights to which the flames are thrown.

The history of all oil-producing countries is replete with stories of burning wells, but to each country the first experience is a most trying one, and the scenes around the burning wells are most awe-inspiring, and at the same time of magnificent grandeur.

The well itself, after the casings were blown out, when the gusher came in, broadened until it was now a funnel-shaped hole, some fifty metres in diameter, but the escaping oil has formed a lake around the burning well of about 500 metres across.

This, too, is burning, and it is impossible for any one to approach nearer than 100 metres to the lake of fire, for which reason it is not possible to use any of the ordinary means of extinguishing burning oil wells and the company has been using every available means at its command, and has imported expensive machinery from the United States to get the well under control, but all of its efforts have been useless, and the fire is burning with unabated vigor. The force behind the gusher sends the flames into the air for a great distance and the sight is one of awe-inspiring grandeur.

The oil bursts out of the well and shoots into the air in a mighty shaft, becoming immediately ignited and forming a massive column of fire which illuminates the whole surrounding country with a light as bright as day. Vast crowds of people through the vicinity of the burning well and hundreds of visitors are flocking from great distances to see the gorgeous illumination.

To Smother the Flames. Disappointed at the failure of the many attempts to put out the fire, the company is now preparing to smother the flames, if possible, by building a dam around the burning lake and filling this in with dirt and stones and other substances, and then gradually drawing the water and nearer to the well, to eventually cover it and smother the flames, which to-day are running riot and flaring high into the heavens their defiant defiance.

The vast amount of oil which is daily flowing from the well, and the uncertainty as to how long it will continue to burn, if under control, which is the problem confronting the owners of the well, one of the gravest importance. It may become clogged and check its own flow, and the gusher may be controlled within a few days, and on the other hand it is just as liable to continue burning with unabated strength for many months.

Meanwhile the company is smiling grimly and taking its heavy daily loss with all the philosophy which the situation will admit. The well has now been burning since July 4th, and is proving one of the most costly, if most magnificent, pyrotechnical exhibitions ever before by the great American national holiday.

The estimated loss to the company up to the present time is very heavy. The drilling machinery valued at $200,000 has been totally destroyed, while the oil consumed daily is valued at not less than $35,000, and as the fire has now been burning for nearly a month the loss from this source is enormous and the fire is bound to cost close upon $2,000,000 or more before it is brought under control, which at this time appears a distant accomplishment.

Burning High in the Air. The force of the flowing oil is such that nothing can be forced into the well, and it is so strong that there is no flame near the surface of the ground, save the burning lake formed by the escaping oil, all the fire being nearer the top of the column. For this reason it is thought that if pipes can be inserted into the shaft of oil below the flames and the surplus oil piped off, the lake of fire can be removed and extinguished and the well controlled. The company has checked that the fire fighters can approach near enough to the burning well to work to better advantage and eventually control the flames and this plan will undoubtedly be tried.

None of the attempts to check the flames have so far been attended with any degree of success, and the authorities in this case are considered doubtful in the burning well work to better advantage and eventually control the flames and this plan will undoubtedly be tried.
