PAY TRIBUTES TO JOSEPH BRYAN

was not the exultation of a successful business man, but the expectation and hope of giving employment to 5,000 persons, which seemed to fill his heart with joy.

Governor Swanson on Mr. Bryan. In the death of Mr. Joseph Bryan Richmond and Virginia sustain a very great loss. He had always been deeply interested in the growth and development of both, and had contributed largely in that direction. He was a citizen of boundless enterprise and one of the most successful and progressive business men in the South.

From a former Editor. I knew Joe Bryan from 1869 to the day of his death as intimately as one man ever comes to know another. We both came here about that time just out of the Confederate army, with nothing to look forward to but what might be wrought out of a ruined and desolated country by our own efforts.

As a Lawyer and Journalist. "Endowed by nature with a fine mind, which had been carefully trained and cultivated, not only academically, but as a lawyer and a journalist; possessed of high ideals and of broad human sympathies, backed by strong and forceful character, and expanded by a broad and generous disposition, he naturally became a leader in all historical, educational, charitable and business institutions within the wide sphere of his activity; and it may be truly said that there is scarcely a cause which has not been advanced by his energetic leadership, his fertile and alert initiative, and the generous devotion of his time and means in furthering the objects which it seeks to subserve."

When the Blood Goes Wrong. When the blood of man becomes impure and filled with poison and decay, it is the cause of all the ailments which afflict him. It is the cause of all the diseases which afflict him. It is the cause of all the suffering which he endures. It is the cause of all the weakness which he feels. It is the cause of all the decay which he undergoes.

CHAMBER PLANS MEMORIAL

Adopts Resolutions on Death of Mr. Bryan and Appoints Committee on Monument. A meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce was held yesterday afternoon to take suitable action upon the death of Mr. Joseph Bryan. On motion of Judge George L. Christian, seconded by Mr. H. L. Cabell and others, the board of directors decided to co-operate actively in a memorial to be erected in honor of Mr. Bryan in Richmond, and instructed President Williams to appoint a committee to represent the Chamber of Commerce, and to act in conjunction with other similarly appointed committees in preparing a plan for such a memorial. President Williams has not yet named the committee.

Resolutions Adopted. "The board of directors of the Richmond Chamber of Commerce hears with profoundest sorrow of the death of Joseph Bryan, Esq., which sad event occurred last evening at his residence near this city."

As a Citizen. "As a citizen he was foremost in the progressive history of Richmond, and indeed, of the State of Virginia, his civic devotion and services being the fruit of the patriotism and courage with which his earlier years had been consecrated to the cause of his State and the South."

Buffalo Exposition; the more than doubling the size of the plant and the number of employees during his administration as president of the Richmond Locomotive Works.

"Among his last acts was to urge, at the risk of his health, the annexation of the two cities that lie on the banks of the James, and the erection of a Woman's College suitable to the needs of this city. The latter enlisted his most ardent support, not alone for the educational advantages thus to be obtained, but in order to keep our young women at home and under parental guidance and authority. On his dying bed, one of his last inquiries was as to the progress of the fund being collected for the Woman's College, and his expression of the hope that the boys' might easily secure the amount needed."

An Example and Inspiration. "As he was in death, so was he in life. His first interests were public, and his private affairs ever made secondary to the initiation of steps needed for the promotion of the progress of this city and State."

"To the young men of this city his life will ever be an example and inspiration. Each one will have to pledge himself to give a little more of his time, to expend a little more of his energy in the advancement of our beloved city, and to fill the void which his death has caused."

"Be it resolved: First, we extend to his family the sincere expression of sympathy of each member of this board at the great bereavement which they and the public have sustained by the death of our friend, adviser and leader."

LAWYERS TAKE ACTION

Meeting of Bench and Bar Adopts Resolutions on Mr. Bryan's Death. At a large and representative meeting of the bench and bar of the city held in the assembly room at the Chamber of Commerce yesterday afternoon, resolutions concerning the death of Mr. Bryan were adopted.

On motion of Judge Christian the chair was instructed to name a committee of five to co-operate with committees from other organizations with the view of erecting a suitable memorial in this city to the memory of Mr. Bryan. Captain B. G. Guigon, president of the City Bar Association, called the meeting to order, and Judge James Keith, president of the Court of Appeals, was made chairman, and Mr. Maurice A. Fowers, secretary.

"insatiable archer" has sped, and there is another gap in our fast and ever-changing ranks. Joseph Bryan is dead. He died at his home, "Laburnum," near this city, on yesterday evening at 8:30 o'clock, surrounded by those who loved him best, and for whom our hearts go out in loving sympathy and grief.

He was a son of John Randolph Bryan and Elizabeth Tucker Coalter, his wife, and was born at Eagle Point, the home of his parents, in Gloucester county, Virginia, in 1845. He was educated at the Episcopal High School, near Alexandria, and later at the University of Virginia.

"Being too young to enlist in the Confederate Army at the beginning of the late war, he entered the University of Virginia as a student in the academic department, but remained there only until he could obtain his parents' permission to join the ranks of the Confederate Army. Indeed, so ardent was his patriotism and his zeal to serve his bleeding country, that on more than one occasion he went to the front to try to do something to keep back the advance of the invading army. As soon as he was old enough he left the university and joined the ranks of the Southern army, choosing as his field of service the command of Colonel John S. Mosby."

"Without going into the details of his services as a soldier, it can be said with absolute certainty that there was no more dashing or gallant soldier who followed the plume of his knightly leader or was nearer the 'flashing of the guns' than he was."

"After the disastrous termination of the war he resumed his studies at the University of Virginia, and graduated in 1867. He located here, and began the practice of his profession in 1868, and soon attained a high position at this bar. He was a good speaker, a man of fine presence and excellent sense, of good literary and legal attainments, and he only failed to attain great eminence because of the untimely death of his father, which was too enterprising and public-spirited to confine his efforts and his talents to wooing the jealous mistress of the law, and he therefore did not seek for special prominence in the law."

"Having in the meantime become associated with gentlemen of large business interests, he turned his attention to financial affairs, to the rehabilitation of railroads, and the organization and enlargement of other corporations for the uplift and development of the South. He was eminently successful in his efforts in these directions, and we believe it is the conservative opinion that no one more does this city and the South owe for their growth and advancement from the prostrate and dreadful condition in which they were left by the war than to him. Indeed, we believe he was regarded early as the first and most enterprising citizen of this city; and the evidences of his eminence and enterprise, especially in Richmond, are too numerous to mention, even if it was the occasion and place for so doing."

other work incident to his interests in these railroads and other Southern corporations, and in all of this legal work he acquitted himself with exceptional ability and to the satisfaction of those with whom he was associated. "No sketch of Mr. Bryan would be at all complete which did not refer especially to his devotion to the Confederate cause and to his efforts to keep alive the memories and principles of that cause. Indeed, he and his noble wife have been first and foremost in every movement looking toward the preservation of the Confederate Memorial Association, and chairman of the building committee, under the direction of which this monument of President Davis was erected in this city. He was also a member of the executive committee of the Stuart Monument Association and contributed largely both of his means and his time to the erection of this monument here to that great cavalry leader."

"Mr. Bryan was truly a 'Virginian of Virginians.' He loved his native State, from her mountains to her sea-shore. He loved her history, her traditions, and no man, we believe, strove more earnestly and successfully for the preservation of her good name and fame than he did. He was principally instrumental in the revival and organization of the Virginia Historical Society, and was the president of that organization for many years; and, in a word, it may be said he strove in every way that he could to keep alive the best traditions and memories of Virginia, and to make her a more advanced and progressive people."

"But above and beyond all, Mr. Bryan was an earnest, humble follower of his Master. His hands were always full in every one of his material developments of his city and section; but they were never so full that he did not have time to do his share of work in the Master's vineyard. He was, therefore, ready at all times to respond to any and every call, both with his time and his means, which had for its object the moral and spiritual development of his people. Therefore, be it Resolved, 1. That in the death of Joseph Bryan, a life that has sustained the loss of one of its most beloved and honored members. This city and State, and indeed, the whole country, has sustained the loss of a patriotic, public-spirited, noble and most useful citizen and Christian gentleman."

Resolved, 2. That we deeply mourn this great loss, and hereby tender to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathies in their and our common bereavement."

Resolved, 3. That a copy of this memorial and these resolutions be spread upon our minutes and furnished to the family of the deceased, and that a committee of one be appointed by the chair to procure a copy to each of the courts, State and Federal, held in this city."

Y. M. C. A. RESOLUTIONS

He was a man of such high ideals, of such sterling courage and lofty Christian character, of such public spirit, of such a generous heart and of such enthusiasm in all things in which he believed, that almost every man, woman and child will feel his death as a personal loss."

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of this association, be published in the papers, and that a copy be sent to the family of Mr. Bryan; and be it further resolved, That, as a token of their esteem, the directors attend the funeral of Mr. Bryan."

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the Boys' Bible Study Club, and be published in the papers, and that a copy be sent to the family of Mr. Bryan; and be it further resolved, That, as a token of their esteem, the directors attend the funeral of Mr. Bryan."

which in war he was willing to give his life, and to which in peace he had always been so willing to give generously of all that he had. "His sympathies were so broad as to know no distinction of creed, and his interest was so profound that he was never satisfied with the mere giving of money, but always followed it with those expressions of deep interest and actual concern which made it such a delight to his fellow-citizens to approach him on any subject concerning the welfare of Richmond or of Virginia."

"The view of the fact that his last work was that in which he was engaged during the past ten days, and concerning which he has sent us messages from what has proven to be his dying bed, we desire, as his fellow-workers in the cause of the higher education of our young women and young men, to place on record our deep sense of loss at the death of this noble citizen, which occurred at his residence last evening."

"Therefore, be it resolved, That in the death of Mr. Joseph Bryan, Virginia has lost one of her noblest sons and Richmond one of her best citizens. Be it resolved, That two expressions of affectionate esteem, a committee be appointed to attend his funeral, and that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family of the deceased, with the assurance of our deepest sympathy in their bereavement."
