"HOW IT FEELS TO BE THE OLDEST FIREMAN" [Special to The Times-Dispatch.] Charlottesville, Va., July 24.—At the thirteenth annual convention of the National Firemen's Association, to be held at Washington, August 17 to 20, Chief Thomas J. Williams of the Charlottesville fire department, will read a paper, the title of which will be "How It Feels to Be the Oldest Fireman in the World."

Mr. Williams has been at the head of the Charlottesville fire department fifty-five consecutive years, and a fireman for sixty years. He is now seventy-eight years of age. He is a native of Philadelphia, and became a member of the Washington volunteer fire department in 1849, remaining until 1854. When he went to Adrian, Mich. The following year he came to Charlottesville, and was appointed chief of the fire department, and has held that position constantly ever since. In 1876 Chief Williams and others organized the Virginia State Firemen's Association, of which he was president in 1891 and its treasurer since 1893. Chief Williams will attend the State Firemen's Convention, to be held in Alexandria next month. The Charlottesville leaves and brush, disappeared yesterday morning and no trace of her could be found. Relatives and friends are now searching the woods in the neighborhood, it being feared that she has committed suicide. Mrs. Wallace had been acting strangely of late, and a careful watch had been kept over her by members of the family.

WARTIME HERO NOT LIVING IN PENURY

After some moments of silence, during which the old man wept at the ceiling, he suddenly drew the bed covering up over his breast and sat upright.

Old, But Still Strong. "They say I am superannuated, I am no such thing. I am as strong as I ever was. I am old, it is true, but I am strong, nevertheless."

Here the old fire came to the face of the soldier, as vividly as in the days when he hovered about Washington with his band of 300 men.

"I have no plans for the future," he went on. "I shall stay in Washington and work on my book—at any rate I shall not leave the city. No—no, I will take no vacation."

"Why, when Lee fell back to defend Richmond from Grant," he burst out, "I still hovered about the Potomac with my band, and kept the Federals on the lookout all the time. I had absolutely no support from the Confederate Army. I was left with my men in the enemy's country, and kept them on their toes all the time."

"My present condition is a part of the game—it's war—and I take it as such. I have been up against it during the war, and did not take it so seriously to heart. I shall endeavor not to do so now."

Appointed by Roosevelt. Colonel Mosby was appointed to a position in the Department of Justice by Colonel Roosevelt, who liked the daring old soldier.

The colonel was United States consul at Hong Kong, China, from 1878 to 1885. Then he practiced law in San Francisco until appointed in the Department of Justice.
