

Social and Personal

John Powell was heard in a recital at the Woman's Club yesterday afternoon. Mr. Powell's reputation as a pianist extends over two continents at least, and the gathering at the club yesterday was the largest seen in years. It was a triumphant occasion indeed when the great pianist came once more among his own people with his arms heaped high with laurels, and right gladly did they welcome him.

One does not attempt to comment upon genius. All that you know is that under the magic spell of the man and by the wonderful skill of the great musician his audience sat enthralled. From his touch came exquisite tones that told a strangely beautiful tale; one heard the rustling of leaves and the delicate blossoming of pale flowers; the sadness of farewell and hopes that were built on great love; singing birds and sighing winds. From the melody looked out the sweet eyes of oval faces, and pink-petaled blossoms had cast their sweetness in the tones of a rippling landscape. Gay taverns and dancing homes, dramatic scenes and the mingled tread of armed heels were all woven into the thread of the beautiful Suffrage League Meeting.

At the weekly meeting of the Equal Suffrage League on Thursday afternoon at 5 o'clock in league rooms, 890 East Broad Street, Miss Ellen Glasgow, who is in Richmond, will open the meeting with an informal talk, after which Samuel W. Meek will make an address.

A business meeting will be held at 4 o'clock on Thursday afternoon, an hour before the regular meeting. Miss Mary Johnston has gone from New York to Connecticut and Boston. She is accompanied by her sister, Miss Elizabeth Johnston. Miss Mary Johnston's speech before the Federation of Clubs in Staunton is said by those who heard her to have been a splendid effort, and to have produced a profound impression.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor Vinson, of Huntington, W. Va., and Misses Mary Carter Anderson and Adelle Chaffin, of this city, who expect to spend the summer abroad, will sail from New York on June 15. The party has taken

Perhaps the most interesting feature of the entire commencement program is the address to the graduating class at the Academy of Music, Tuesday evening, with Dr. Charles W. Kent, of the University of Virginia, as the speaker. Dr. Kent is one of the best known speakers in Virginia, and his address on that occasion will be of most interesting nature.

Friday, May 3, was a very notable day at the Visitation Academy of Monte Maria, 229 East Grace Street, when the inmates of the institution welcomed their bishop, the Right Rev. D. J. O'Connell. It was decided that letters should be written to all schools in the city, both public and private, asking for flowers, as usual, to be sent to Mr. Hooper's office, at Hollywood gate, on the morning of May 20. All members are urged to come to the section on that date to assist in arranging the decorations.

Plans were discussed for the marking of the section by a gateway or with a privet hedge, and an entertainment to raise funds for this object will be given some time in the early fall.

To-day's Play. An attractive affair of this evening will be a comedy entitled "The Kentucky Belle," which will be given under the direction of the Helping Circle of Calmarosa Public School, corner of Marshall and Third Streets. It will be a very delightful event, and the public is invited.

Meeting Postponed. The Monumental Chapter of the Daughters of the King, which was to have held a meeting this afternoon, will meet on Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, instead of at the appointed time. The meeting has been postponed on account of the ceremonies attendant upon the laying of the cornerstone for St. James Episcopal Church, which takes place this afternoon.

Mr. Powell's concert yesterday was totally beyond criticism. It was wonderful music that brought new visions across the soul; sadness of the heart and unclouded skies. It was an afternoon long to be remembered.

ADDITIONAL PROOF OF KING'S REGARD

Sir Charles Frederick Becomes Comptroller of Dowager Queen's Household.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONSECO. THE transfer of Colonel Sir Charles Frederick from the post of master of the household of George V., to that of comptroller of the household of Dowager Queen Alexandra, which is the light of a shining sword, and a mark of honor, is a mark of the high appreciation of his services by the sovereign. For the state of health of Queen Alexandra at the present time is highly favorable, and it is highly desirable that some one should have in her service a man of the prime of life, who has for years been one of the most efficient and confidential gentlemen in waiting, and in the full possession of his health, to carry out the duties of Sir Dighton Probyn, who is now in the service of Queen Alexandra ever since her marriage that is to say, for some fifty years.

Colonel Sir Charles Frederick was appointed master of King Edward's household in 1907, on the retirement of Lord Alington, and on the death of King Edward, his successor, George V., reconstituted the royal household. Sir Charles was reappointed to the post of master of the household, not by any means an easy or a merely ornamental one, far from it. The duties of the comptroller, and his principal duty is the very prosaic one of exacting one of supervising and controlling the work of the kitchen, the baker, the confectioner, the butler, the baker, the candlestick maker and other tradesmen. But Sir Charles has all the worry and trouble of keeping in order the royal servants; a much more difficult task, for he falls to the lot of the head of the household to see that the household, or even to the manager of a large hotel, for the royal servants are not only exacting, but they have privileges, and their various positions, and the limitation of their duties, their hours of work, their remuneration, and their various duties, and their precedence—and I do not know what else besides.

All these points are governed by tradition, and practically the salaried help "below stairs" is a government of their own. It is the business of the master of the household to harmonize the relations of all these people, a task rendered all the more difficult by the fact that he cannot discharge one of them, but can only remove his dissatisfaction by lowering the status of the offender.

During the whole of the reign of Queen Victoria not a single servant was discharged, extraordinary to relate. Furthermore, it is an ancient rule governing all the actions of the master of the household that he must always be kind and considerate. If will, therefore, be understood that he must be a man possessed of almost superhuman tact, forbearance and self-control, and a temper under extreme provocation. For he has matters to attend to besides the servants and the tradesmen's bills. The royal household is a government, and being a fixture, it might be likened (if the comparison may be pardoned) to a large traveling circus that suddenly "picks up stakes" and makes a jump of hundreds of miles.

When the King and Queen move from Windsor to Balmoral, for instance, the master of the household has to attend to the transportation of their Majesties and their suites and baggage; also the servants and their luggage, often at little more than an hour's notice. He engages the train for the royal retinue, which is very large, pays the railroads, arranges for regular meals of the whole party en route, checks the impedimenta on shipment, and when it arrives at its destination, he has to see that nothing goes astray and does the thousand and one things that only an experienced household manager can do. He is a traveling circus, and he has already remarked, or the master of the royal household himself could enumerate.

The foregoing, however, is mere plain sailing, the routine of the office. It frequently happens that at the last moment there is a change of plans. After everything is provided for, and the party has started, a sudden and distant point, a political crisis, the death of a relative of the royal family, or some other unexpected event may upset everything, and the whole party may be shipped off in a different direction, probably to a locality with a dissimilar climate, necessitating the slightest inconvenience of better therefrom. Indeed, some royalties have no idea that such worries exist. A laughable illustration of this blissful ignorance is related of Queen Alexandra. Seeing that one of her maids of honor looked distressed, she inquired what was the matter. She was told that the girl, while traveling—privately, not in the royal suite—had lost a package. Gently and sweetly, but with an air of reproach, Her Majesty said: "My dear child, why did you do that? I never lose my luggage, and you must be the Queen ever saw her belongings in transit, in their trunks and packing cases, or gave them a moment's thought, until they were needed, may her journey's end, and found them laid out ready to her hand.

magnificent feat of gallantry, and where the cavalry regiment which he raised, recruited almost entirely from Frenchmen of birth, from Pondicherry and elsewhere, and known as "Probyn's Horse," rendered most effective service in suppressing the rebellion, obtaining fame throughout the length and breadth of the empire. He also saw service in China, and in the Umballa campaign of 1858. Retiring from active service in the army, he joined the household of the then Prince of Wales (afterwards Edward VII.), and placed great reliance upon Sir Dighton's care of his consort—more than upon any other member of his household save Mrs. Knollys. It is, therefore, only natural that Sir Dighton should spend the remainder of his life near the Queen, where he has lived for so many decades.

Sir Charles Frederick is succeeded in his late office of master of the King's household by Sir Derek Keppel, a younger son of the seventh Earl of Albemarle, and brother of the present Earl. Sir Derek has been in the service of the present King for near a score of years. There is no doubt, therefore, that his capabilities are understood, and that he will satisfactorily fulfill the duties of his new position in a satisfactory manner.

Probably his early training as a civil engineer developed his powers of arrangement and organization. He is under fifty years of age and his military service is confined to a lieutenant-colonelcy of the Twelfth Middlesex Cavalry Service (Prince of Wales's Own Rifles, as it is now called), a daughter of the fifth Baron Suffield.

The Mrs. Keppel who was so celebrated during the reign of Edward VII. is the wife of George Keppel, a brother of Sir Derek.

GRAND JURY GETS ORDERS TO PROBE

Alleged Fraud in Municipal Primary Will Be Taken Up To-Day.

Judge R. G. Southall, sitting for Judge S. B. Witt in the Hustings Court, charged the grand jury to investigate the allegations alleged to have occurred at the Second Precinct in Jefferson Ward in the Democratic primary on April 30. Reports of fraud in that precinct have been prominent since the primary, and Judge Southall's charge to the grand jury was by no means unexpected.

However, the grand jury did not go into the matter yesterday, but will meet this morning at 10 o'clock, when the probe will be begun.

The prosecution of the case will be directed by Assistant Commonwealth's Attorney Charles L. Page.

Among the witnesses who will most likely be examined will be R. B. Brophy, R. C. Dixon and L. J. Winder, election officers of the precinct in question; W. A. Evans, a voter for whom it is alleged that a guide ticket was issued; and T. W. Coates, who is said to have had a blank ballot in his possession; E. C. Hicks, sergeant-at-arms of the City Democratic Committee, and probably members of the Jefferson Ward delegation in the City Committee, which named the election officers.

The members of the grand jury are Captain Charles F. Taylor, foreman; James Ryland, E. S. Rose, Robert Whitsett, Austin Brockmough, John Mann, and T. E. T. Ellis.

What is regarded as one of the most significant facts in the case was that the returns from the Second Precinct in Jefferson Ward were not announced until several hours after all other precincts in the city had been heard from.

The grand jury yesterday took no steps whatever in the alleged ballot juggling, but gave its entire time to the consideration of other cases.

Many Indictments Returned. The following true bills were returned: G. D. Barnhill, forgery, two indictments; W. A. Coleman, statutory charge; George Davis, robbery; Randall Gray, malicious wounding; John Graham and Wade Walker, housebreaking; John Graham, housebreaking; Lee Holmes, malicious wounding; Lou Hunt, malicious wounding; Richard Jasper, criminal assault; Charles and William Johnson, malicious wounding; James Mayo, housebreaking; Lella Perkins, grand larceny; Joseph White, housebreaking; Maria Anderson, malicious wounding; Edward Att, grand larceny; Mattie Branch, grand larceny; Laurie O. Burton, forgery; George Banks and Grover Banks, housebreaking; Leroy Williams, malicious wounding; Josephine Watkins, grand larceny; White housebreaking; Fleming Wallace and Henry Holt, malicious wounding; Ernest Mason, housebreaking; John Robinson, attempted murder; G. W. Stokes, housebreaking; Beno Strayhorn, housebreaking; James Smith, housebreaking; Bertha Thompson, housebreaking; George White, malicious wounding.
