SUFFRAGETTES AS POLICE

Ask They Be Allowed to Guard Their Parade Next Year.

New York, May 10.—Suffragettes who have been criticizing the police protection afforded them in connection with their bi-parade here last week have submitted to Commissioner Waldo a plan for a woman's police force for the suffrage parade next year.

This plan, they think, will do away with the conditions against which the woman marched complained after the demonstration this year. If the scheme is carried out 5,000 women will be organized to police the parade, and it is hoped the "Big Bill" Devery will consent to drill them.

The woman officers would be dressed in white tailor-made suits, with white or black helmets, and would wear a shield in red, white and blue enamel, bearing the words, "Woman suffrage police."

News of South Richmond

South Richmond Bureau.
The Times-Dispatch, 1009 Hill Street, The Madison Bldg.

The engineering corps sent out by the Chesapeake and Western Railway to make a survey of the West Route and to ascertain the probable cost of an extension of its line to Richmond has reached a point just below the Belt Line, about one mile from South Richmond. Just where the proposed line will enter the city is a secret which the men on the work are not acquainted. One survey being made would indicate that the river will be crossed near the Belt Line bridge, while another route which will be surveyed in the next few days would bring the line out to the river near Seaboard Air Line bridge.

The people of Chesterfield County are interested in the proposed extension, which will open up a fine farming region. The line is now operated as a narrow gauge, but will be standardized if the extension is built.

Finish Chesterfield Bridge.
Another link in Chesterfield's system of modern highways was completed yesterday when working until dark Contractor J. W. Gray succeeded in getting the last of the concrete in the forms on the bridge spanning Great Creek, near Centralia. Built entirely of reinforced concrete, with but one span, the bridge will stand for many years. It is of standard width and will cost about $60,000. Two weeks will be necessary for the concrete to set, and at that time it will be offered to the county supervisors for acceptance.

The Outlaws will meet the Independents at Forest Hill Park, 10th Street, where they will play a game with an interesting game also result.

NEW ATTACHE HAS SEEN REAL SERVICE

Colonel Henry Yarde-Buller Gets Appointment to Washington.

BY LA MARQUEISE DE FONTENOY.
LEUTENANT COLONEL Henry Yarde-Buller, D. S. O., who has just been appointed British military attaché at Washington, in the fourth son of the first Baron Churston, and an uncle, therefore, of the present (third) Baron Churston. The new attaché was born on November 2, 1862, and married in 1902, Adelaide, daughter of Lieutenant-Colonel Meekling, of Richings Park, Colabrook, in the county of Buckingham.

He has seen a good deal of service in the Sudan and in South Africa, and in addition to his Distinguished Service Order, he is a member of the Victorian Order, Commander of the Dannebrog Order, Commander of the Order of the Crown, these foreign orders being conferred upon him in connection with his service as military attaché at the various European courts. His nephew, Lord Churston, is at the head of the line old Devonshire family of Buller, the direct part of the line having been Sir Henry's father, who was described by Lord Bacon as "Sir Robert Peel's choice and pattern country gentleman."

Lord Churston owns about 12,000 acres of land in Devonshire and Cornwall. The first Baron Churston had a brother, Colonel Charles Yarde-Buller, who married in 1856, Leah, daughter of General R. W. Kirkham, of California, and widow of D. B. Blair, of San Francisco. Mrs. Walter Yarde-Buller some years ago began suits of the most sensational character against her husband in the English courts, her charges being denounced by him as the phantasies of a lunatic. These assertions received a certain amount of credence, the fact that when she returned to the United States, attempts were made by her relatives in California to place her under restraint. Calling herself "Lady" Yarde-Buller, a title to which, of course, she has no right, she furnished an immense amount of material for stories of a more or less dramatic character.

I notice by the standard "press" that her death is stated to have taken place in 1904. How far this statement is correct has not been verified, it is generally known. For some years there was considerable uncertainty as to her whereabouts.

Colonel Henry Yarde-Buller reaches Washington, those who have occasion to meet him should bear in mind that he had nothing whatever to do with the marital troubles of Mrs. Walter Yarde-Buller, or with those in which the name of the famous Mrs. Atherton was brought. The fact of his retaining his commission in the army, and of his being appointed to a diplomatic post, especially such an important one as that at Washington, is proof enough that his record is entirely free from any stain of the kind, and from any reproach whatever.

By the death of his wife, Sir Anthony Cope is left a widower at the age of seventy. His second son, Walter Galen Cope, it will be remembered, is married to Maria Ignacia de Estevez, of New York and Cuba. Sir Anthony is chief of one of the oldest families in England; much older, indeed, than its baronetcy. A Sir Anthony Cope was Vice-Chancellor to Queen Catherine Parr, the sixth (and surviving) husband of Henry VIII., the Bluebeard monarch.

Bramshill, the country seat of the family, is one of the finest places in the south of England, and among other interesting relics shown to visitors is the old oak chest in which, according to the legend the "Mistress Bough" bride concealed herself when playing hide-and-seek on the evening of her wedding.

In a spirit of fun, and to tease the bridegroom, she ran through the great mansion to find a good place to hide. In a secluded lumber room she opened the oak chest and chose it as an excellent means of concealment. Full of this idea, she stepped into it, and lowered the lid, which, by means of a secret and powerful pulley, was barely raised and she "fastened her door forever." Her disappearance long remained a mystery.

Everywhere she had been, and she gave up the search in despair, and "threw away his life in foreign wars." Decades afterwards, however, a skeleton was discovered in the chest, draped in bridal satins and lace, which served as the means for her absolute identification. For the "oldest inhabitant" could not believe that she had mysteriously sprang away of the young bride, an almost forgotten episode in the family, another generation having meanwhile been born, matured and departed.

A few years ago Bramshill was in danger of being destroyed by a forest fire, which was barely suppressed in time to prevent its devastating the mansion. Sir Anthony ascribed the starting of the blaze to political enemies, who were using it as a means of effecting a Socialistic and "strong manifesto" in a local newspaper. "I am aware," said he, "of having incurred censure from any one, my only crime that I had been loyal to my sovereign, and my utter loathing of Socialists, Radicals, and in only a slightly less degree of those who, calling themselves Liberals for political not patriotic purposes, aid and abet their doctrines." Practically all the same effect. After this outburst of the same indignation, Sir Anthony must have felt humiliated by the discovery that it was not Socialists, but an anarchist, not a Liberal, not even a tramp, that had set fire to his woods and placed his home in jeopardy, but a middle-aged boy, the son of one of his servants.

It is only by the merest chance that the Bramshill property happens to be in the possession of the present baronet, who is the thirteenth to bear the name. The eleventh baronet, Sir John Cope, who died in 1851, knew so little about his family that he supposed he had no heirs, and wished to leave his estate to his lawyer. The latter was too honest to agree to this, and commenced an investigation, which brought to light the fact that Sir John Cope had a distant relative living in America, his fifth cousin and next heir through collateral descent from the second son of the first baronet, who had died. The intervening baronets had died. This fifth cousin was William Henry Cope, who therefore became the twelfth baronet.

This latter Cope was a minor canon of Westminster, had served in the army as a lieutenant of the Rifle Brigade, and was a son of General E. R. Cope. His success in the army was not an unqualified blessing, for his maintenance being too large for his comparatively small means. He was a great friend of Charles Wesley, who was rector of the neighboring village of Eversley. He was also a friend of Cardinal Newman, though not by any means a convert to his high Anglican creed to announce in his will, he died "in the faith professed by the Anglican Church." Sir Anthony Cope is the son of Canon Cope, and his next heir is his (Sir Anthony's) eldest son, Denzil Cope. (Copyright, 1912, by the Brantwood Company.)

Vidalia is Threatened.
Natchez, Miss., May 10.—Back water from the Atlatia crevasse coming through a twenty-foot gap in the New Orleans and Northwestern Railroad embankment, a mile north of Vidalia, La., is slowly encroaching on Vidalia to-night, and by to-morrow the town will be inundated unless the breach is closed, a task regarded as next to impossible of accomplishment. The women and children of the town have been removed to Natchez. Boats are being held in readiness for the men who are working at the breach. Men from the United States battleship Nebraska, which is anchored at Natchez are lending a hand in the fight against the water, and the launches and yachts are standing ready to go to the assistance of the workers. Practically all live stock has been brought to Natchez.

It is anticipated that Vidalia will be flooded to a depth of four or five feet. Vidalia is a town of 1,500 inhabitants. It is directly across the river from Natchez, and is the parish seat of Concordia parish. The overflow in the central and northern portions of Concordia parish is rising at the rate of two inches in twenty-four hours.

DELUGE OF RAIN WEAKENS LEVEES AT BATON ROUGE

reported from Garder, twenty-seven miles south of Baton Rouge, at 7 P. M. that a forty-mile gale of rain, blowing along the river and a torrent of rain was falling.

Engineer Waddill reported to Captain Sherill, chief of the engineering corps here, that he considered the situation in the vicinity of Garder serious, and would remain there to-night.

A telephone message from New Roads at 7 o'clock stated the rainfall there up to that hour probably had exceeded four inches, and the down-pour continued.

At Baton Rouge rain fell nearly all day, and to-night the downfall was reported the heaviest experienced there in several weeks. Strong south winds blowing over the levee against the levees at the State capital, and there seemed to be only a slim prospect of saving the front levee.

At 7 o'clock the wind continued high at Baton Rouge, and the water was running over the levee in several places, threatening momentarily to crumble the big embankment on which thousands of men have worked a week.

Probably the heaviest rain in months fell here to-night, accompanied by high winds, and a terrific velocity of twenty-seven miles per hour, and a brilliant electrical display. At 9 o'clock the streets in the business districts were flooded with rain water.

At one period during to-night's down-pour one-half inch of rain fell in New Orleans within the brief space of five minutes, according to the Weather Bureau records. Street lights and lights in most of the business houses in the business district went out, and that section of the city was in darkness for ten minutes.

Judge Will in Pine Shags.

A telegram received here yesterday from Hot Springs stated that Judge Will had arrived there in fine shape, and that he felt even better and stronger than when he left Richmond on Wednesday. He did not suffer any ill effects from travel, and is believed to be that he will speedily regain his strength.
