Announcement Corrected.
 On yesterday morning was printed a notice of the marriage of Miss Mary Lipscomb, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Lipscomb, of West Point, and Vivian Christians, of this city. Lipscomb, West Point temporary address, 418 North Ninth Street."

Mr. Christmas explains that he is the object of a most unpleasant and disagreeable practical joke. There has been no wedding such as stated in Wednesday's issue of this paper.

Lord and Lady Massereene Leave New York for England.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY. LORD and Lady Massereene, who sailed on Saturday last from New York for England, on the last lap of a tour around the world, after a trip across the continent from San Francisco, are a very interesting couple. For the vicount, who won the distinguished Service Order as a Major of the 15th Lancers during the South African war, where he was badly wounded, is through his mother, a grandson of the famous sporting novelist, Major Whyte Melville, and among his most cherished treasures at Antrim Court, near Antrim, which is his principal county seat in Ireland, are the speaker's chair and mace of the last Irish Parliament at Dublin, both of which his ancestor, John Foster, acquired when called upon to pronounce the doom of the Irish House of Commons, after the passage of the Union Bill of which he was one of the most ardent and determined opponents.

By the terms of his will, the mace is held in trust by his heirs "until the day that entreated it to my keeping" in the Irish Parliament—"should demand it again."

This of course cannot be until Home Rule is secured for the Emerald Isle. This John Foster farmed throughout Ireland as "the inconvertible" was the last Speaker of the Irish House of Parliament, and while his wife was created Viscountess Ferrard in her own right, he received twenty-one years after the Union, the title of Earl of Antrim, in the Kingdom of Ulster, and was a member of the House of Lords. Their son Henry, second Viscount Ferrard, and second Lord Orkney, married in 1810, Harriet, daughter of the Duke of Devonshire, in her own right. She was the daughter of the last and fourth Earl of Massereene, who was also the eighth Viscount of that ilk, the Viscountcy of Massereene having been originally conferred by Charles II. on Sir Charles Clotworthy, as a reward for his part he played in promoting the restoration. As Sir Charles had no male issue, the title passed to his only son, John Clotworthy, and his heirs general. In fact, the Viscountcy of Massereene is merely a title which can descend in the female line.

As the present Lord and Lady Massereene have no son, but only a daughter, Hon. Mrs. Massereene, now three years old, it is she who will inherit this peerage, as the thirteenth Viscount of Massereene, the Viscountess Ferrard and the Baroness of Antrim will go to a distant cousin, Chichester Clotworthy, a bachelor of sixty-two.
