ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Cooking is a matter which concerns the whole family, and under modern methods and conveniences it is made so attractive the whole family is becoming interested, if not taking part in it.

"These biscuits are delicious; this cake is excellent," says the father. "I made them," says the daughter, and both father and daughter beam with pleasure.

It is a crime, with our modern agencies, helps and facilities, to have soggy biscuit, or wooden cake, or leaden pastry.

Royal Baking Powder has made home baking a success, a pleasure and a profit, and the best cooking today the world over is done with its aid.

Miss Virginia Gordon, who has been visiting in this city, is now the guest of Miss Isabel Allen, in Norfolk.

fax, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. G.

Carolina, who has been visiting Miss Alice Angel here for the holidays, has returned to her home.

Misses Maud and Mabel Greenlee, of Studley, are spending a short time with relatives and friends in Washington.

Gertrude Carter are in Louisville, Ky., where they are the guests of relatives.

WOULD RESCUE DOG INSTEAD OF HUSBAND

Lady Esme Gordon Declares
She Would Not Hesitate
a Moment.

BY LA MARQUISE DE FONTENAY.
LADY ESMÉ GORDON, who in reply to the question as to "whether in the event of a fire she would rescue her husband or her dog," intimated her preference for the quadruped, adding that she would not hesitate a moment about the matter, is a widow, and it is only fair to add, by way of explanation of her avowal, that the late Lord Esme Gordon, a younger brother of the bankrupt Lord Huntley, premier Marquis of Scotland, was not exactly what might be described as a model husband.

He used to go by the sobriquet of "Teapot Gordon," a nickname dating from his Eton days. He was the most comely of our particularly good-looking brothers and making his home at Bella Villa, near Boulder's Lock, was renowned on the Thames for his particularly picturesque and ingenious profanity. His first financial smash came in the form of four particularly unlucky investments in the City, and when he was at Oxford, at Brasenose College, and he rather violated university ethics by pleading "infancy," that is to say, his minority, for not paying his creditors there.

He married a very rich woman, who inherited a big fortune from her father, a great Glastonbury multi-millionaire, which did not, however, prevent her from allowing him to figure time and again in the bankruptcy court without coming to his rescue. The means which he adopted for extorting money from her were sometimes extremely entertaining.

On one memorable occasion, while on a shooting expedition in Albania, he got the better of her by pretending that he was a captive in the hands of an Albanian chieftain, with whom he was really staying as a guest. There was the customary story of torture and eventual death unless the ransom was remitted by Lady Esme, through the bandit chief's messengers; and as hesitation was at first shown as to the sum to be paid, the subsequent messengers brought down "proofs"—first a sliced off ear, then a little finger, then another finger, all purporting to be those of Teapot Gordon. Finally Lady Esme relented. For while, according to her latest published statement she would readily have left him to perish in a confinement in order to save herself, she did not relish the idea of seeing him thus disappear piecemeal. So the ransom was sent and in due course Lord Esme reappeared among his friends, not mutilated, however, but in possession of a full complement of ears and fingers, looking very cheerful, and with so much money in his pocket that he was able to pay to his better-half, Presumably the Albanian chieftain had likewise his share of the ransom; no doubt in the shape of a percentage on the deal. The memory of all this lingers in the mind of Lord Teapot Gordon's widow, and if I call attention publicly to her preference for dogs as compared to husbands.

Rarely has a woman gone to her grave more unimpaired than Dona Lina, widow of Francesco Crispi, for years the all-powerful Premier of Italy and often described, by reason of his masterful ways, as the Roman Bismarck. Crispi was in every sense of the word the evil genius of Crispi and personally accountable for a number of the financial scandals with which his name was connected, which ultimately drove him into retirement, and from which, as it has since been shown, he could have cleared himself if he had been willing to place the blame where it belonged.
In fact, his one mistake as a public official was that he gave too free rein to his wife, and then shielded her at the cost of his own reputation.

At the time when he made her acquaintance she was a woman whose name figured on the books of the police to place the blame where it belonged.
and popular wife Dona Rosalie, eventually perpetrating bigamy, in contracting a civil marriage with Lina, on the untenable pretext that his union with Dona Rosalie had been illegal. For this offense, not only Crispi himself, but also his colleagues, Ministers of Interior, Baron Nicotera, were obliged to resign their portfolios and to submit to an eclipse. That Crispi should have found it possible after that to return to public life and to secure and hold the premiership for many years, speaks volumes for his political ability.

Queen Marguerite, who has been for some time the wife of the late King Humbert with his own resignation, and that of his entire administration if Dona Lina remained barred from court, and as a cabinet crisis at that moment would have been dangerous to the dynasty, the King, with great difficulty, induced Queen Marguerite to yield.

Later on, greatly to the disgust of Queen Marguerite, Crispi was able to secure the Order of the Annunziata from the King, which rendered Dona Lina a titular cousin of the King and Queen, and as such possessed of the privileges of a princess of the blood at court.

Dona Lina on several occasions publicly slighted Queen Marguerite. For instance, one evening at the leading theatre at Rome, when Queen Marguerite had heartily laughed at and applauded a situation in the play which, while extremely ludicrous, was slightly risqué, Dona Lina, who was present in another box, took it upon herself to appear shocked and to utter remarks to the effect that she regarded this act of discourtesy by Dona Lina to the Queen, the Roman correspondent of that paper, who had made his home in the Eternal City for a quarter of a century, was expelled from the kingdom at twenty-four hours' notice as an undesirable alien.

When Crispi died his daughter, Princess Linguaglossa, who was invested to him as he was to her, as devoted to him as she was to her, insisted on retaining his private papers, with a view to publishing such of them as were needed to clear his memory of the charges of dishonesty which she had labored since regarded this as a sacred duty. But in spite of her angry protests, her mother disposed of these papers to the Italian government in return for an annuity, and the memoir of Crispi, published at the instance of and with the collaboration of his daughter, has thus been robbed of what would otherwise have proved its most important and enlightening features. This led to a lasting quarrel between mother and daughter, in which sympathy was with the latter, even among those who had been benefited by the suppression of the documents disposed of to the government.

People passing along the Boulevard Raspail in Paris the other day, had their attention called to a large poster in front of a poultryer and game dealer's, intimating that 1,000 rabbits were on sale, representing the bag of one of President Fallières' shoots at Ram-bouillet. This is something quite unprecedented, even in the case of the most thrifty of the Presidents of the French republic. Naturally the President cannot be expected to himself consume, or even to distribute among intimate friends, such huge bags as those made by his official and diplomatic guests at the presidential bat-teaux. But his predecessors, like the rulers of monarchic countries, have been in the habit of distributing these huge bags among the hospitals and charitable institutions. For a President to put them up for sale in a poulterer's shop and to pocket the money is an entirely new and not particularly admirable departure.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.) Fredericksburg, Va., December 3.— Dr. W. L. Forest, of the University of Virginia, will deliver a lecture at This is one of a series of lectures ar-place during the winter at the Normal School.

It is said that the Board of Superintendents of Spotsylvania County contemplates shortening the game season, owing to the scarcity of game, and that other counties in this section will do likewise. Unless some such action is taken game in this section will be entirely exterminated. Game was never known to be so scarce.

A colored woman in Madison county got a gun a few days ago to shoot at a hawk which was flying near her flock of poultry. She, however, missed the hawk and struck a valuable horse belonging to a neighbor.
