MISS CAROLINE ARMISTEAD BRIDE OF ROY M. JONES

Hoxley-Wadley Wedding Takes Place at Home of Bride on Monument Avenue.

The marriage of Miss Caroline Talbot Armistead, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Talbot Armistead and the late Westwood S. Armistead, to Roy Meriwether Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. T. Catesby Jones, was quietly celebrated yesterday morning at 11 o'clock in the apartment of the bride at 211 East Franklin Street. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Landon R. Mason, rector of Grace Episcopal Church, in the presence of the immediate families of the bride and groom. The rooms were arranged quite simply with vases and bowls of white chrysanthemums. The bride was given away by her uncle, William H. Talbot, and she wore a smart traveling suit of blue cloth with a velvet hat and a corsage bouquet of orchids. She was unattended. Fontaine Jones, brother of the groom, was best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones have gone North on their wedding journey, and on their return to Richmond will make their home in this city. Although very quietly celebrated, the wedding is one of the most important and interesting of the fall, on account of the social prominence of both Mr. Jones and his bride.

Hoxley-Wadley. Another interesting event of yesterday was the wedding of Miss Margaret Burnett Wadley, daughter of Mrs. Everett Wadley, and Littleberry James Hoxley, son of W. W. Hoxley, of Roanoke, which took place last evening at 8 o'clock in the residence of the bride's mother, 1816 Monument Avenue. The ceremony was performed by Rev. J. I. Downman, rector of All Saints Episcopal Church, assisted by Rev. L. H. Hale. The wedding march from "Lohengrin" was played as the bride descended the stairway, and "The Evening Star" from "Faust" was very fittingly chosen for the recessional. The lower floor of the Wadley house was thrown open to the guests and banked with Easter lilies and American Beauty roses, and the improvised altar arranged at the end of the long drawing room, was decorated in American flags, burning tapers and smilax. The mantels were banked in lilies and great bouquets of American Beauty roses were placed in the hall.

The bride's wedding dress was an exquisite affair, fashioned of white duchess satin with a garniture of tulle and orange blossoms and a court train of silver brocade. Her veil of illusion fell from a cap of rose point lace and she carried a shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and gardenias. She was given in marriage by her brother, Albert V. Wadley, with whom she entered the drawing room, and they were met at the altar by the groom and his best man, Clovis Moomaw, of Lexington. Miss Carrie Lee Wadley, who was her sister's maid of honor, wore a French gown made with bouquets of silver lace and a bodice of blush-rose velvet. She carried a bouquet of American Beauty roses. The two little children, Sally Ann Hoxley and William Hoxley, who were the bridesmaids, wore matching costumes copied from an old print. Little Miss Hoxley's frock was a quaint, old-fashioned affair of white organdy and she carried a "ramoth" nosegay of white roses, edged with a lace frill and tied with tulle streamers. The little boy wore an Oliver Twist suit of white broadcloth.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones followed the ceremony, after which Mr. and Mrs. Hoxley left for an extended motoring trip through the North. Some of the guests from a distance here for the ceremony, were Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hoxley, Miss Mary W. Hoxley, Miss Sally Ann Hoxley, Abner Hoxley, Mr. and Mrs. John C. Haley, of Roanoke; Clovis Moomaw, of Lexington; Miss Helen Seelye, of Charlottesville; Mrs. Jane A. Walker, of Washington; Miss Eugenia Griffin, of Salem; Everett Wadley, Jr., of Philadelphia, and others.

Card Party for Debutantes. Misses Eleanor and Janet Swann, of Grant Park, were the guests of last night at a very attractive card party in honor of Miss Roberta Pleasants and Miss Mary Lyon Tyler, two of this season's debutantes. Misses Swann received Miss Pleasants and Miss Tyler. The color scheme, which was yellow, was carried out in detail, the rooms being beautifully arranged with autumn leaves, chrysanthemums and candles. The lights were also covered in yellow. Prizes were awarded to the two making the highest scores. In addition to this, gifts were presented to Miss Pleasants and Miss Tyler. These gifts were Misses Mary Lyon Tyler, Roberta Pleasants, Austin Bertrand, Elizabeth Beveridge, Sarah Oppenheimer, Bessie Richardson, Mary Irvin Watkins, Louise Kellogg, Lillian Sobie, Mary Ragan, Evelyn Jackson, Constance Heindl, Mary Hutchinson, Gertrude Gary and Carrie Tullafiero, Messrs. A New School BY LILLIAN RUSSELL. (Copyright, 1914, by Lillian Russell.)

In past generations society women were disposed to depend almost entirely upon their own beauty. Facial coloring—indeed, for their very complexion. Now a new school has come into existence, one that teaches that the color of their cheeks and lips is determined by the condition of their health. Their physicians tell them that exercise in the open air, bathing, resting and attention to the health in a general way will produce better results than the powder puff and lip stick.

Advanced women fully realize the necessity for care of the skin, the hair, the nails, etc., but they also appreciate the fact that beauty is not confined to bottles and boxes bearing French labels. They apply to natural rather than artificial beauty.

The skin requires careful attention and often special nourishment. There are good skin foods which should be freely used. They assist nature in doing her work. They tend to offer the complexion as much protection as possible. Cosmetics and lotions be their proper use.

The tendency of women of the new school is to give opportunity to beautify them. The better the complexion from which they work, the more satisfactory will be the result of their efforts to make their appearance presentable.

These women are attempting to do this systematically. They breathe pure air, the ventilation of their rooms, the selection of proper foods and the right amount of rest to cultivate natural beauty. They are aware that these lines artificial processes are minimized in importance.

Remember: The desired natural coloring of the cheek may be more difficult to acquire, but it is more beautiful by far than the artificial. In any case, let "made in America" be the motto.

Lillian Russell's Answer. Mrs. S. R.: Wash your face just as you would your hair. Use a good shampoo and rub it gently through the hands, but be careful that you do not tangle it. Dry by gently shaking it. If you do not care to do this yourself, you might take it to a good hair-dresser and have it done for you. The wash should be kept as clean as your own hair.

Edna May: I am sorry, but I cannot send you a formula for hair tonic containing sage and sulphur. I have no such formula. If you care for the hair, you should use a good shampoo. It shall be glad to send it to you. This is an excellent tonic. It is not a dye, and it will not stain the hair in any way, and may safely be used on hair of any color.

Divia: In order to become a professional beauty specialist, it would be necessary for you to take a course in the art of hairdressing. It cannot be learned by reading beauty books alone. If you are unable to take a course, you might try to get into some beauty shop as an apprentice and learn the trade that way?

M. W.: This is an excellent shampoo for litan hair: mix thoroughly one tablespoon of listerine, three table-spoons of olive oil, and one-half cup of water with warm water and rub the shampoo mixture well into the scalp. Wash with warm water. Do this three times, and rinse the hair thoroughly. The rinsing is the most important part of the shampooing. If you do not get all of the mixture out of the hair, it will not have the desired effect. It will make the hair shine and become dull looking. This shampoo may be used for blonde hair also, or, in fact, half of any shade.

Anne: A good brush with long bristles is the best to use for the hair. Be sure you get the bristles long enough so they will touch the scalp when you brush. Use a hair brush and comb if you wish to have healthy hair. They should be kept as clean as possible. The comb should have large teeth. A fine comb pulls the hair and breaks it off. After using a comb, dip it into hot water containing a few drops of ammonia. This is an excellent way of keeping the comb clean. Warm water and soap are not so effective. Add a few drops of ammonia to this also, for the ammonia cuts the grease and dirt from the comb. The brush and comb should be cleaned each day.

Dr. Brody's Health Talks HYSTERIA.

The unfortunate derivation of the term hysteria misled both lay and professional opinion. Perhaps it is true that more cases of hysteria in nervous cases, but the patient's sex is strictly a secondary consideration, so far as the cause of this functional nervous disorder is concerned. "Hysterics" is not hysteria by a long sight. When a girl loses her temper, she becomes overwrought, hysterical, she may develop hysteria in its true form, which no one but the doctor will recognize. Her behavior is not likely to raise ructions and make her feel generally obnoxious, and in that case we are willing to agree with grandma that she has the "hysterics," and that a good application of discipline, either in the form of a spanking or a scolding, is all that she needs.

The "hysterics" is a term which is used in a crude and utterly reprehensible manner to designate hysteria. It is merely an aggravated case of the "tantrums" or "pure caseousness," which is treated as hysteria. Hysteria is as involuntary as an epileptic seizure, and the patient deserves as kindly a treatment as the epileptic with pneumonia or St. Vitus dance would receive.

The Psychic Element. In every case of true hysteria, no matter what form the trouble may take, or what disease may mimic it, there is some physical basis for the condition or expression of some unconscious or forgotten emotional experience of some kind. The most characteristic feature of hysteria can be explained as a symbolic expression of some idea long repressed by conscious will power, but now released through temporary inhibition or relaxation of will power. In fact, recent progress in psychological investigation gives ample proof that most hysterical seizures are based upon some intellectual stimulus in the childhood. We have not space to go into details here. It is enough to say that the hysterical attack is now successfully treated by the most diverse types of suggestion by a scheme of mental suggestion which has replaced the long forgotten incident which left its indelible impression upon the mind, and which changed the patient's connection with the present reaction, and in this way enabling the patient to overcome the chronic.

This psycho analysis and catharsis, as it is called, is comparable to showing a child that he is afraid of the dark. When the child is sure that nothing overcomes him in the darkness, he no longer fears the darkness.

The Mimicry of Hysteria. Regarded from a purely physical standpoint the symptoms of hysteria resemble those of many other diseases, but almost any organic disease, from fever to paralysis, so closely that even the most intelligent physician is likely to interpret with due consideration of the influence of mind the mystery at hand. The hysterical attack is a present portrayal of some past emotional experience becomes quite clear.

Major hysteria, producing all sorts of morbid and abnormal conditions, furnishes cases of phenomenal curing for the advantage of various healing cults to boast of.

Questions and Answers. E. W. J. asks: Is there a preventative of "grip"? As cold weather comes on I can feel gripp symptoms. As I sit reading the paper I often get a chill after supper I feel myself taking cold—sneezing. How can I evade the "grip"? Reply: You do not describe so-called "grip," nor any acute disease. Of course, "colds" and "grip" are just vulgar names for influenza, which is acquired by personal contact with previous cases. Probably you are subject to hypertrophy of the turbinate bodies in your nose, or maybe polyps or something of that kind, requiring local treatment. You should have your nose and throat examined.

H. H. asks: I would like to have you recommend a treatment for cold hands and feet, caused by being frozen. Reply: After frostbite there is usually an increased sensitivity to the cold for years. The only thing we can recommend is a daily morning cold bath with brisk calisthenic exercise, night and morning.

Numerous correspondents: The shorter the question the more satisfactory will be the answer. A long letter stirs up the editor's mind and tends to befog the intellect. For instance: L. P. B. writes: What is constipation and how is it treated? And we answer promptly: Dropping or sagging of the stomach. Wear an elastic support. Lie down with knees elevated for an hour after eating. Get regular exercises especially to develop the abdominal muscles.

A returned-traveler says: "When I was in Europe this year I found both cities so thickly dotted with hairdressing parlors and hair goods stores that I wondered if there had ever had time for anything but care of the hair. Personally I was interested in finding a really good shampoo, and was happily surprised when several in each branch suggested that our own American-made canthrox shampoo is best. I tried it and have decided that it is not advisable to use a makeshift, but always use a preparation made for shampooing only. You can enjoy the best that is known for about three cents a shampoo by getting a package of canthrox from your druggist; dissolve a teaspoonful in a cup of water, and your shampoo is ready. After its use the hair dries rapidly with uniform color. Dandruff, excess oil and dirt are dissolved and entirely disappear. Your hair will be so curly that it will curl much heavier than it is. Its lustre and softness will also delight you, while the stimulated scalp gains the health which insures hair growth."—Advertisement.

The Trey O'Hearts Romantic Tale by Louis Joseph Vance Copyright, 1914 by Louis Joseph Vance

By arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company it is possible to read "The Trey O'Hearts" in The Times-Dispatch as also to see it in pictures at the Superior Theatre. Synopsis of preceding chapters: The Trey O'Hearts is the death wish of a woman, Trine, by an accident of vengeance, which, through the agency of his daughter, Judith, a woman of violent passions like her own, he wages against Alan Law, son of the man (now dead) who which left Trine helpless cripple for life. Alan loves and is loved by Rose, Judith's twin and Trine's only child. Trine's small circumstances, and her poverty, wins her love. Thereafter Judith is drawn into a life of crime by her mother's love, and jealousy of her sister, Rose, who is alienated from her father through her failure to carry out the death wish. Because of the aid she has extended to Rose, Trine, through the mediation of Western Arizona, Alan, Rose and Barcus are captured by Trine by an accident and lowered down the shaft of an abandoned mine where they are like to die from flood and fire.

CHAPTER XXVII.—THE EXPLOSION. OF a sudden the thought crossed Alan's mind that Marrophat had arranged the latter solely to keep them away from the bulkhead. Now that he thought of it, he felt certain that the powder-room had been deliberately disclosed to him by Jimmy.

Probably, then, the keg and fuse were but stage properties, or possibly—

Whether or no, was death in one form preferable to the other? He was decidedly of the opinion that it was better to be extinguished once and for all time in the space of a second, annihilated than to live, explosion, than to die thus lingeringly.

On this consideration he drew Rose with him back to the bulkhead. It was solid—these barriers of stout oaken planks, reinforced with heavy iron. Neither light nor air might penetrate it, save in the scantiest quantities. Nor could they hope that the water would seep out of it in sufficient volume to counterbalance the deluge pouring down the ladder-shaft.

And this last was stalking them there in the blackness like an insatiable hunger. The lamp of its advancing wavelets rang in his ears like the purring of a man-killing tiger in the darkness of a night jungle.

When they had been some fifteen minutes behind the bulkhead, the water mounted the head and almost rose perhaps ten feet behind them, and poured down in ever deeper volume to back up against the barrier. It was waist deep, however, before they retreated to the head of that rise.

Half an hour later it was waist deep there, on the highest spot in the tunnel. In fifteen minutes more it had reached their chins. And they stood with heads against the roof of the tunnel.

Holding Rose close to him, Alan kissed her lips that were as cold as death. Then, fumbling under water, he found the hand of the man at his side.

The water lapped his lips like a blind hand. Far from resenting this, Mesquite, pipe in mouth, hands in pockets, admired and applauded, and rather resented the change that befell when two other men, strange as they were, appeared in town had helped in Mesquite's history) charged out of the Mountain House and interrupted the latter with cries of greeting and jubilation.

The leader of these answered to the name of Marrophat; his companion was a person named Jimmy. Mesquite acquired the information through paying close attention to the substance of their communications with the cripple. More than this, however, it learned little something seemed to have been accomplished by the two, something that was highly gratifying to Seneca Trine; for one guarded word from Marrophat was all that was required to convince the old man on oath to phrases of honeyed appreciation, his smile of such smiles as called to mind fugitive flashes of sunlight athwart a snow-bound landscape. And he was chuckling almost merrily when he was led from the car and carried into the hotel.

What passed between the trio after they disappeared behind that bedroom door Mesquite could by no means say. But that a celebration of some sort was in progress was evidenced by the frequency with which Marrophat and Jimmy called on the bar for more liquid refreshment, as well as by bursts of laughter long and loud and somehow strangely cynical of accent.

And toward midnight one belated Mesquite paused in the street outside the Mountain House for one last curious stare at the lighted windows of Mr. Trine's quarters, and so witnessed an incident which puzzled him by fits and starts throughout the balance of his days.
